Damaging winds disrupt phone, power service

Most of the debris has now been cleared away and power phone service restored in aftermath of the damaging storm that struck Schoolcraft County last Sunday night early Monday morning. Winds, which as high as 60 mph by Vern Bernard, manager of the Schoolcraft County Electric Company, raked the area during the night. While property damage was sizeable, no personal injuries were reported. Schoolcraft County crews had long distance telephoning from Sunday evening Monday afternoon. A total of long distance circuits were out of commission as a result of the storm. General Electric Company crews had throughout the early Monday morning restoring service in the district from Blaney to the east to Nahma on the west. Work crews from the Ed-Sault Electric Company also called out during night to repair numerous lines in their overhead lines. A result of fallen trees, especially hard hit, was the Lake area where some down trees were reported Monday. Service was also disrupted in the city of Manistique Sunday night and early Monday when falling trees and branches downed power lines. During one period Sunday night power in the Lakeside area was out for nearly an hour. City Manager Robert Noe stated that sheets of plywood and insulation located at the site of the low-income housing project on Maple Street were whipped around by the storm and some blown on adjoining property. A number of aluminum storage buildings, garages and porches were damaged throughout the city. A number of large trees were toppled in the city causing some damage. One of the largest to come down was at the Clarence Thorell residence at 7500 Garden where a huge tree fell on a car parked in the drive. Another large tree was felled near the corner of 5th and Deer Streets at the Archie Carpenter residence. Winds of up to 60 miles per hour were recorded at Port Inland where the processing of small stone had to be halted when belts were whipped off. Normal production continued on the handling of the large stone. There was no interruption of school in the city of Manistique Monday, however elementary schools in the rural areas were closed because of the lack of electric service. The Big

City offers new Armory site

The City Council, meeting in special session Tuesday night, offered a new site for the proposed Manistique Armory after city officials were advised by General Carlisle Neifer, of the Michigan National Guard, that the East Lakeshore Drive property was unsatisfactory. In a formal motion the council offered the city owned site on the south side of Elm Street, north of the old quarry, to the Army Advisory Committee as a proposed new location for the Armory building. The site which is approximately 300 feet by 600 feet would meet the space requirements specified by the National Guard. The committee members stated that the new site would be referred to National Guard officials immediately for inspection and consideration. City Manager Robert Noe stated that upon learning of the National Guard's decision regarding the East Lakeshore property, he contacted Harley Ellington Associates, architects for the project. He was advised that soil tests indicated conditions which would make it extremely costly to construct as large a building as the Armory on this site. Officials of the firm told Noe that the sub-soil consisted of a four foot deep mixture of sawdust and silt which would have to be removed and replaced with eight feet of new soil to bring it up to the grade level of adjoining US-2. In addition the water table on the site is such that expensive methods would have to be employed in constructing the foundation of the building.

Do you put a higher price on an Olds than we do?

Our own surveys indicate that quite a few people think an Olds costs a lot more than it really does. Result? Many people buy an ordinary car and end up with a lot less car and value for their money.

It's so unnecessary, too, because Oldsmobile has many models that are priced right down with so-called low-priced cars. See your Olds dealer. He'll prove that they're closer to Olds than you think.

Advertising aids outlined

"Advertising Brings Us the Business" is the title of an article authored by William L. Henschel, Sr. of Manistique and appearing in the April issue of the American Agent and Broker magazine. Oscar, agent of the Savings Assurance Agency in Manistique, Henschel outlines a wide variety of advertising programs that are utilized by his firm, which is now moving into new quarters on S. "In a town the size of ours, everything we do reflects on the agency and can have a direct effect on our sales," he writes. Henschel entered the insurance business in 1956 as a life insurance agent. He became a general agent in 1962 when he purchased the Savings Assurance Agency.

6. Never leave medicines where children can see or reach them. If a tot can see a box or bottle, he'll often figure out a way to reach it. A safe, useful medicine for you, can be poison to a child. Keep medicines hidden and out of reach - in a locked cabinet when possible. Also, never take medicine in front of small children - they may want to follow your example.

7. Always destroy unused medicine remaining from a prescription. If your doctor advises you to stop taking a drug before it has all been used, destroy the remaining portion by flushing it down the toilet. Many children have been poisoned by swallowing leftover medicines carelessly put aside by adults.

8. Do not take additional drugs without asking your doctor. Sometimes various combinations of products can be dangerous. For instance, some sleeping pills should not be used, with some pain killers, and alcohol should not be used with some sedatives.

Fading touch of winter

Winter is slow to leave the woods. Although it is receding, the white snow, combined with the white birches, made this tranquil scene a few weeks ago at Colwell Lake.

Subtle pollution

WEDNESDAY WAS "EARTH DAY" in many areas of our country, as the concerns of environment and the quality of life came under close scrutiny and received concentrated attention.

The belated enthusiasm and concern over the world in which we live comes none too soon. It is difficult for many people here in the relatively remote and underpopulated Upper Peninsula to generate much interest in what seems to be an academic concern.

The mercury pollution of Lake St. Clair and other waters in the Detroit area, discovered almost by chance by a graduate student doing routine checks, provides a dramatic example of how close we are to the point of no return. That lake and portions of Lake Erie are now closed to fishing, without any clear indication of how long such a ban must be imposed.

It should also serve to point up other, greater, dangers. Much of Detroit's drinking water is taken from Lake St. Clair. Does the possibility of an even greater disaster that could poison the water supply of that great urban center seem so remote now?

Over on the other side of the state there has been a belated hue and cry over the discovery that cyanide wastes were dumped into Lake Michigan at Ludington. Isn't there also the possibility of contaminating the water supply of a major city through a similar accident?

These of course are the dramatic examples that make headlines and capture public attention. It is unfortunate that it takes a crisis to stimulate preventive action and stricter controls.

It is also unfortunate that there can be no crisis to deal with the more subtle forms of pollution that intrude upon the quality of life here on our Planet Earth.

Urban decay, for instance, is tragic not only for the economic loss in abandoned buildings or littered vacant lots, but it saps the very beauty and vitality that once was associated with the city, lending an air of defeat, despair and resignation that is a blight upon the mind and sight as well as upon the pocket-book.

It is difficult for many, for instance, to become excited over billboard pollution along our highways, or housing developments that strip a countryside bare in order to pack row after row of depressing hutsches on minuscule lots that offer neither room nor opportunity for privacy or individual expression.

A city slum is a depressing thing, but a rural slum, or cottages crowded and decaying along the beaches of a dying lake are also offensive to the spirit and a burden to the mind.

It is right and proper that we address ourselves immediately to the obvious and pressing problems that affect the quality of the air we breathe and the water we drink. These are what the space scientists refer to as our basic life support systems, and they are needed if our Earth spaceship is to continue to be our home as we travel through the trackless reaches of the universe.

But it is just as vital that we address ourselves to the entire question, including population control, open spaces, river and forest preservation and natural wonders, for without these things that trip on our spaceship would be a wearying and frustrating journey.

Around the Horn

Say what you want about the English, they do have a way with words, and penchant for the right phrase at the right time. Who else but Churchill, for instance, would come up with a line like blood, sweat and tears? (Actually, the phrase is blood, toil, tears and sweat, and Churchill stole it from Garibaldi, John Donne, Lord Byron and Lord Alfred Douglas, among others, which just proves what a good phrase it really is.)

Just the other night, for instance, I arrived home at what might have seemed to some as an unseasonable hour, but recalling an English phrase that I once heard and admired I explained to my wife that I fell among friends.

How much more palatable, more pertinent, more explanatory, than the self-defeating line, "I was out with the boys." Fell among friends! Who could take issue with such a reasonable and moderate explanation? It is the essence of all that is needed in this perilous society of today, fraught with tensions and hostilities and suspicions. Fell among friends! A noble phrase.

Of course in any given group you are bound to come upon those who are suspicious of such nobility, who view such phrasing with a cynicism bordering on the miasmatic and a hostility approaching the malign. No matter. Our strength is as the strength of ten because our hearts are pure.

But I digress. In the process of falling among friends (Oh, how those vowels and consonants come tripping and liltting in mellifluous meter!) the subject was broached of things we would like to do. Not the ordinary, humdrum routine of likeable things to do, but the noble aspirations, the ultimate challenges, the flinging of the final gauntlet, as it were, before we are called to that Great Golf Course in the Sky.

Well now, you can imagine the images that were conjured up in short order, the itineraries that were mapped, the battles fought and won, all during the course of the conversation that followed the introduction of a sensational topic such as that. After all, a falling among friends should produce conversational gems in wholesale lots, a kindling of new fires instead of the stirring of old ashes, a sowing of the seeds of hope separated from the chaff of dull routine and daily drudgery.

Thus it seemed perfectly reasonable to me that I should propose my fondest dream, my heart's desire, my ultimate ambition, and to tell the friends I had fallen among (Oh, how smoothly that fits in there, how appropriately it modifies!) that my greatest goal in life today is to sail around Cape Horn.

Now is that unreasonable? Why shouldn't a man want to sail around Cape Horn? Here would be the greatest test, fighting the same elements and sparring with the same geographical adversaries that have challenged the great mariners of the world ever since 1520 when Fernando Magellan carved his niche in the halls of history by finding a southern water route from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

If Fernando could do it then, with wooden boats and fearful sailors and an erratic compass, why couldn't I do it now, 450 years, later, in the atomic and space age?

(My wife's reply was that I would need all the help I could get, but don't count on any from her as she would be busy looking for a new sofa for the living room, which she has classified lately as her ultimate challenge.)

I am not going to sail the Horn (as we sailors call it) from west to east, which is the easy way, but from east to west, which is the tough way because the wind is always blowing from the west. If you sail from west to east you are fudging a little bit, and if you come home and casually drop the information that you have just sailed around Cape Horn some know-it-all is sure to ask, "West to east?" and I want to have the satisfaction of sneering disdainfully and replying I was seeking true adventure, not child's play.

The exact details of this trip have not yet been worked out, but I am looking forward to a triumphant return and an eventual falling among friends (Oh glorious phrase!) when in the natural course of things the topic of conversation will get around to things we would like to do.

Ah, the glory of the moment, when I can capture the attention of my friends among whom I have fallen, pause for a moment as I gaze thoughtfully into my glass, and say, "Well, having been around Cape Horn..."

I'll probably get home so late I'll have to sleep on the new living room sofa.

GARDENERS AND LONGEVITY

Now that the daffodils, tulips and other shoots are poking their heads out of the earth, blackbirds and robins have returned, the snow has finally melted in most places and the frost is out of the ground on the south side of the buildings, the older gardeners are beginning to stir, grow restless and poke around in the soil.

I have some theories about older gardeners and I can't prove any of them. As far as I know, no one else can, either. One of these theories is that gardeners live longer than other people. Have you ever heard of a gardener having a heart attack? How many gardeners do you know who are over seventy?

I think that some graduate student in longevity might well investigate this theory and would find it to be true. Another graduate student might investigate the reasons for it. He would probably find that gardeners get the right kind of exercise. They are always bending, stooping, pulling, pushing, walking, lifting, but rarely exert any great effort and hardly ever hurry. I don't know of a single gardener who jogs for exercise, but none of them needs to. They are already in good shape.

Also, gardeners eat more wholesome foods than others. We know that vitamins and minerals are lost within a short time after a vegetable is taken out of the ground or picked from the stalk or the vine. Gardeners grow their own and take them from the garden to the kettle. The food value is not lost.

Gardeners are concerned with beauty. They love flowers and try to create beauty spots. I don't know how the graduate student would set up the research to test the hypothesis, but I think that people who love beauty and create it live longer. They have more to live for.

My final reason for believing that gardeners have a better than average life span is a psychological one. Gardeners live in the present and the future. Their activity forces them to look ahead and it is harder to die, except by accident or violence, when one is involved in what is going to happen next. Gardeners spend their winters scanning catalogues, deciding what to plant in which bed and speculating about the health of an apple tree planted last fall, the blooms on a forsythia, the hardness of a newly planted hedge, which variety of squash to raise or whether the flowering crab should be transplanted this spring or next fall.

Even though it could be allegorical, I think it is significant that human life began in a garden -- The Garden of Eden. God must have wanted man to live on earth for a long time; that's why he made a gardener of him and gave him a garden to care for.

One could do worse than to be a gardener. The older gardeners I know are usually pleasant, gentle people. It is interesting to speculate. Are they pleasant and gentle because they are gardeners or are they gardeners because they are pleasant and gentle?

WHAT FOODS Do You Choose? We'll be talking about this at foods meetings to be held in the Schoolcraft County area in May. Definite dates will be set up and you will be notified through this column. Do watch for this information because I'm sure you'll be interested in the meetings and everyone is invited.

We will be using a series of 12 pamphlets called "Shop Smart." Each contains information on being a thrifty shopper, information on nutrition and good recipes. We're taking it for granted that you already know how to cook but that you like new ideas. I'm sure we'll have many good cooks at the meetings and will get ideas from them too.

THE SHOP SMART pamphlets were prepared by our Foods and Nutrition specialists of Michigan State University. Mrs. Anita Dean probably was responsible for the recipes that are included in each pamphlet. Her recipes are always dependable and tasty, the kind your family would enjoy. They vary from soups to desserts. I used the pamphlets at meetings in Menominee county and will use them in Delta later.

LOOKS are More Than External. Many teenagers and women too, believe that looks are an external matter - that they cannot influence their appearance from the inside. This is not true.

In part, the benefits of good health - attractive hair, skin, eyes, and figure - come from the food you choose to eat. You will look better if you follow good eating habits. This is true with teenagers, our senior citizens and everyone in between.

CHECK YOURSELF. What did you have for breakfast this morning? For lunch and dinner yesterday? Write a list of all the foods and check it. We all know what we should eat. Did you do it yesterday? Is what you ate yesterday typical of what you eat most days? How well do you do on good nutrition?

Haphazard selection and application of fertilizer may lead to unbalanced fertility conditions that promote the uptake of excessive amounts of some elements and too little of others equally important for plant growth. ATTEND THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE THIS SUNDAY

This message is brought to you by the following local business establishments in the interest of strengthening community churches:

MANISTIQUE PULP & PAPER CO.

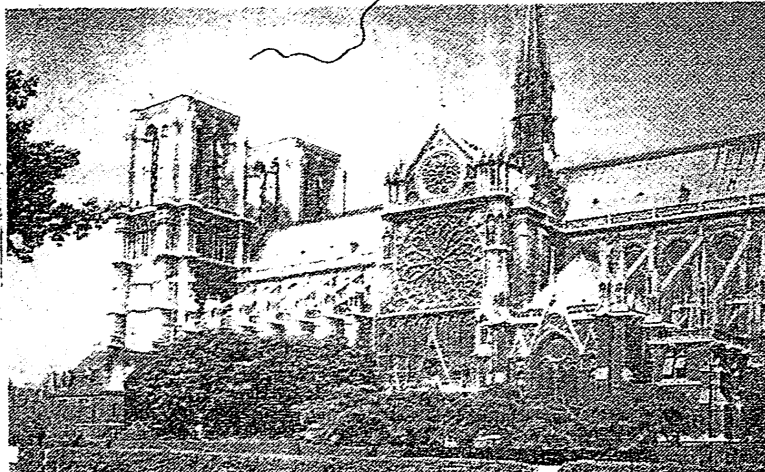

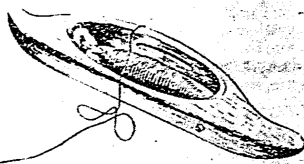

Magnificent tapestries, sometimes taking years to complete, decorated the walls of many homes and churches in the Middle Ages. Woven with richly colored strands of silk and wool, they often pictured scenes from the Bible. To create a beautiful tapestry required patience... skill... devotion.

Today each of us weaves a tapestry — the fabric of our lives. We sit at a loom, wondering whether the pattern of our lives will be of bright rose, green or golden threads, or whether the events will show as somber, dark colors.

A weaver in the Middle Ages worked on the reverse side of his tapestry. By looking up at a mirror, he could see how the entire design looked on the right side.

When we look up to God in worship, we can see with clarity the pattern of our lives. Attend the church of your choice for perspective on your life's tapestry.
