BOOTS AND SHOES, GENT'S FURNISHINGS

Take Notice!

We do not blow hard about prices on cheap goods. For inferior goods are dear at any price. Neither have we any money to give away as we have to live the same as other people. But we can buy good honest goods as cheap as the next man and our light expenses will enable us to sell them at as close a margin of profit as the largest dealers. We will do so. Call and be convinced.

A Straight Pointer!

On Monday morning last THE STAR passed into the hands of the Tribune Publishing Company. Beginning with Thursday, May 25th THE STAR will be known as THE Tribune, with Geo. E. Holben, of Holton, Kansas, as editor and manager. As will be noticed, the date of publication has been changed to Thursday.

The company will add new material and in many other ways endeavor to increase the efficiency of the office and the publication.

I am very grateful to the citizens of Manistique and Schoolcraft county for numberless courtesies extended me in the past. I have endeavored at all times to publish a first class local paper and am justly proud of the success that has attended me in my efforts. I have always been loyal to Manistique, its people and diversified interests.

I will remain with the company, having charge of the mechanical department of the new project. With increased facilities for doing job printing and publishing the paper, I bespeak for the company an increase of the liberal patronage the merchants of Manistique have accorded this paper during its history.

Mr. Holben, who has charge of the office is a first-class newspaper man of much experience and comes highly commended as a good, conservative citizen.

I heartily wish THE Tribune Publishing Company unbounded success.
Yours truly,
En. Joxia.

THE GREATEST OF ALL THE GREATS
—WILL CO—
And will for James Emerson, who said: "To it kings have dedicated their kingdoms in the name of the Lord." It is a branch of the ideal fig tree under which Buddha reclined at last, when he was undergoing his apotheosis. His leaves are carried away by pilgrims as relics, but, as it is too sacred to be touched, even with a knife, they can only be gathered after they have fallen.

Three Americans, in the employment of the government of British Columbia, recently accomplished a feat hitherto deemed impossible by crossing the Selkirk mountains in the depth of winter. The object of the trip was to ascertain if it was possible to lay out a pack and cattle trail over the range from Golden to Kulus.

The policeman and a suspected criminal who he had arrested, were walking beside the Danube at Kelheim, Bavaria, recently, when the prisoner suddenly jumped into the river. The man was full of great blocks of ice, and jumped safely from block to block and reached the opposite bank.

It is especially fancy cover de decorated it can be made in panels as seen in the illustration. The top of the tank is put between two boards of the lining before they are nailed and firmly fastened. A false bottom prevents the ice from injuring the inner tank. Two or more shelves are put below the ice receptacle to hold whatever is to be kept cool.

When Capt. Eben Howes commanded the New York packet steamer Manistique, he was rapidly through the water. Not only were the life boats out drift, but the steaming masts, masts of wood, and local planks were thrown overboard, and a for man was sent aloft to look out while the ship was being brought to anchor. His and the lee-quarter boat was made ready for lowering. A passenger, named Capt. Howes, who had English then so many things overboard, giving him was answered, because they would be guides to the boat in looking for after the man. In a narrow way, the notice of those in the boat, and in the event, the other articles would multiply the chances of finding the man. (Cited by the articles, the boat, after an hour's search, found the man floating by life buoy and in good condition. He had seen some of the driftwood, and being a good swimmer, had turned toward it. The great eye of the ship flying Cloud, saved a man by the same means, after he had been two hours in the water. The boat is a small object to find in a sea-way, hence the prudence of throwing articles overboard as guides to find him."—Boston Herald.

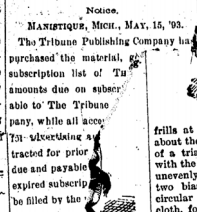

She Married an Indian.
Unexpected Outcome of a Romance in Which an English Girl Figured.

"Some of the Washington correspondents are very queer," said a woman who had lived for many years at the capital. "English people, you know, are apt to be more eccentric in their views and their fancies than Americans, and sometimes they take very odd likings. Some years ago there was a young English girl stopping at the British legation in Washington and this girl, together with the lofty scorn of American men peculiar to the insular Empire, had a proportionate although entirely theoretical admiration for the original red man of whom, however, she had never seen a specimen.

Just at that time there was some trouble in the west and the Americans were performing their duty and dancing other war antics, and to Miss—a great delight a deputation of chiefs was sent on to Washington to have a small "reception" was given by the latter to his savage guests. The chiefs of the Manistique were present, and Miss, whose romantic little head was full of nonsense, announced her admiration for a handsome young chief, who was one of the party. He was evidently flattered by her very obvious attentions and he had a small Indian trinkets, which she seemed perfectly delighted. He at last teased her about his Indian sweetheart and laughed among ourselves about her evident infatuation; but her visit to America coming to an end, she went home, and I thought nothing more about it until a few years ago, when I heard the end of the story.

It seems that she was genuinely epaive with the dusky young warrior, and Savage Bear, or whatever was his name, was equally as much taken with her. She was finally, it is said, turned to this country with a "reception" which seemed to her a million without demerit; and after a visit to her chief in the far west they were married. If she settled down upon a ranch in game country. This delighted the young brother, who is a great sportsman, say I am told that they live very pleasantly in the west. —N. Y. Tribune.

A FAMOUS DWARF.
Jeffrey Hudson Was Once Taken to the "Boo" Royal Table Inside a Tree.
Jeffrey Hudson was a celebrated dwarf, born in England in 1180. At eight years of age he was but eighteen inches high. He was engaged to marry the daughter of a nobleman, and was entertained by Charles I. and the queen at his summer castle, the Swan Hall, in the Isle of Wight. The king and queen were so much pleased with his side of the sea. When the king opened there stood the little fellow, dressed in rags, and he was taken to the table of the king. The king assembled and placed the dwarf on the table, and the dwarf presented his head to the king. The king said to him: "I have heard that you were a dwarf for many years."

The Woman of Genie Hair.
The woman with a loving heart is sure to look upon the bright side of life. She is full of hope and joy for all the unwelcome events which may befall her. She believes in silver linings, and looks to them even to others. A week of rain or fog, an avalanche of unexpected trouble, or any other of the thousand minor afflictions of everyday life, have no power to distress her. She is full of hope and joy. The love light is still in her eyes, whether they are dark or bright. It is she who conquers the greyness of old age and the dyspeptic snarl. The crowsfoot brings out its arms to her, and is comforted. Old people and strangers always sit at her feet. She has a good word to say for the man or woman who is under the thumb of a cruel mistress. She is full of hope and joy. Her gentle hair helps her to see the reason for every poor star's misstep, and she serves with acceptance on the judge's bench, but she is never Harper's Bazar.

Fig. 2.—HOMERLAND REFRIGERATOR CLOSED.
The refrigerator may be fastened in a thoroughly strong manner so it will not warp. If it should become rusty it may be cleaned with a wire brush and a good coat of paint. It is a good idea to have a fire coal in an iron vessel closed within the lower compartment. The inside should be thoroughly washed with soap and hot water at least once a week. A galvanized iron pan or basin should be placed under the drainage tube which constantly carries away the water which would melt the ice rapidly if allowed to remain. Wrapping the ice with newspaper will preserve the ice longer.

PRESENCE OF MIND AT SEA.
An Old Seaman Recalls Instances in Which It Was All-important to the Success of a Cruise of Mind at Sea.
The old Boston mariner, "I remember that many years ago when Capt. William T. Glidden, formerly of Capt. Glidden & Williams, was in command of a ship bound to New Orleans, she was struck by a squall on the south side of Cape Cod, and the foremast, close to the eyes of the rigging, splintered and broke, but held together. The topmast asked to be saved, and it would have gone over the side if the broken part had separated. Capt. Glidden kept the ship off, brought the topmast upright by the backstays, and then took a spare spar, rove it up through the catheads, lashed it to the heel, or doublings of the topmast, and around the foremast below the topmast, thus securing the lower mast, the rigging, and all above them.

"Ho think this out was the work of a second, but hours were required to dress in rags. He was taken to the table of the king. The king assembled and placed the dwarf on the table, and the dwarf presented his head to the king. The king said to him: 'I have heard that you were a dwarf for many years.'

Why Heavy Portieres Should Be Discarded in Summer.

It is the fault of many of our rooms that they are over-draped, especially in summer. It should be the rule in country houses, as it is in the city, to dispense with all heavy portieres and hangings in summer, not only because of moths and flies, that are liable to ruin any delicate materials, but because such hangings are superfluous in summer.
