COAST GUARD STATION BILL PASSES HOUSE

Congressman Luecke Congratulates Community On Success Of Measure

Believe Construction On Manistique Station Will Commence Soon

Washington, D. C.—The House of Representatives Monday passed legislation providing for the establishment of two Coast Guard stations in the 11th Michigan Congressional District.

The House authorized the establishment and maintenance of a Coast Guard station at Manistique, Mich., and a similar station at Menominee, Mich. Bills for construction were introduced by Representative John Luecke of this district early in the present session of Congress.

Construction of the Coast Guard station at Manistique will furnish badly needed marine safeguards for the ever-increasing volume of commercial and pleasure traffic in the vicinity of this cities.

Passage of both bills was regarded as particularly noteworthy because Congress is generally reluctant to approve the construction of more than one station for a congressional district during the same session.

Luecke was reported to be highly gratified at the action of his colleagues in approving both bills simultaneously.

The following letter, from Congressman Luecke, attributes the success of the project to local cooperation from the community and from the Manistique Lions club.

Dear Mr. Bellaire, I take pleasure in informing you that the bill providing for the establishment and maintenance of a Coast Guard station at or near Manistique, Michigan was today passed by the House of Representatives.

Youths Are Sentenced To Varying Terms At Hard Labor In Marquette

Mrs. Hazen was re-arrested in justice court here Saturday afternoon, when further investigation of the car accident, which a few months ago cost the life of Lawrence Baker, of Garden, warranted the more serious charge. Prosecuting Attorney W. J. Sheahan said. Negligent homicide was the original accusation.

Besides Mrs. Hazen, the only other defendant to enter a plea of not guilty was William Hyden, charged with assault.

Nine youths who had pleaded guilty to charges ranging from desertion to breaking and entering, were given prison sentences by Judge Rannels. All these defendants were sentenced to hard labor in the state branch prison at Marquette.

Integrity

According to the dictionary, integrity may be defined as "uprightness, rectitude, honesty, faithfulness." In Scriptural usage, we find the English prayer for integrity, the wise man praying in a "nation of justice, righteousness, and wisdom, and Job fervently sought it.

There is a certain character of it. As we have a reference example of practical integrity. We read that the temple at Jerusalem was in need of repairs, and that, when the king of Judah, ordered that the money which it came into any man's heart to contribute for this purpose, he used to repair the breaches of the temple wherever they were found. When this work was finally taken in hand, we read (1 Kings 7:22): "They reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen for their use."

What a lesson for us to have! The recognized integrity of the men entrusted with the funds secured out the Lord's house in order, obviated the need for guarding against misappropriation and excluded unwelcome thoughts of suspicion and mistrust. The result amounts to what was contributed with a willing heart, and they were disbursed in the same way. A suitable, harmonious condition this, for restoring the house of the Lord, and for accomplishing work while preserving the sanctity of the temple.

Actually, it is not every day the Lord's day, and every place His habitation. All men, therefore, may happily in God-bestowed integrity, since God, good, is omnipotent and make of their work a sanctuary. They may also be assured that the Lord will be with them, and that He will preserve the sanctity of the temple.

The servants of the Most High have always been blessed in the discharge of their duties, and in the consciousness of being faithful administrators in their Master's household. It is not in vain that they endeavor to do the will of God furnished with the power of His Spirit. Let us be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity."

FLAMES DESTROY J. SNYDER HOME
Michigan Avenue Dwelling Is Razed; Neighbors Detect Smoke

Flames last Thursday evening destroyed a two-story building owned by James Snyder and his family. Household furnishings were also destroyed. The property was not insured.

The fire broke out shortly before 8 o'clock while members of the family were away. Neighbors called the smoke and flames, and a fire department, but the fire building was ablaze when it was reached. The fire was quickly brought under control, however.

It is believed that the fire started in the kitchen from stove heat and that the flames spread quickly through the heavy paper which covered the interior walls, which covered the interior walls. Besides Mr. Snyder and his children, the building was also occupied by Mr. and Mrs. William Goetz and their child.

An amusing phase of the fire fighting was the rescue, by Ray Lamer, fireman, of what he believed to be the body of a small baby, actually a large baby doll.

RETURNS FOR JUBILEE

Rev. Albert Torbet, pastor of the Presbyterian church in Manistique, Ill., was in charge of the Church of the Redeemer in Manistique from 1902-1909. Rev. Torbet expressed gratification at the church's development. "The years of our association with the church were full of satisfaction," the former pastor said.

organization of perhaps 50 percent of the companies, is literally plucked from foundation to roof with these corporate names.

"The name plates are about 20 inches long and eight inches wide and the building is so covered with them as to constitute one of the major curiosities of Nassau."

Mr. Trey added: "One of the most dangerous methods of tax avoidance consists in the use by American citizens of corporations formed in countries where taxes are low. Some of these countries make a sort of ambulance-chasing racket out of the possibility of attracting wealthy American taxpayers."

"I am unable to say how much money is lost by the Government through this device. A conservative estimate is that 685 personal holding companies have been formed by Americans in the following places:

"Bahama Islands 94; Newfoundland 202; Panama 46; Prince Edward Island 243.

An examination of the financial conditions in these places shows no justification whatever for such extensive business organization."

The State Department, according to Under Secretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill, already is exploring the idea of permitting foreign nations to enter into agreements with the United States, whereby the transfer of assets from one country could not form the basis of tax deductions in another country.

Social Security—The Social Security Board today released a summary of progress, as of June 1, 1937, of its administration of the Federal old-age benefit, unemployment compensation, and public-assistance provisions of the Social Security Act.

The summary shows that, as of that date, 27,012,936 social security accounts have been opened. To date, 27,012,936 social security accounts have been opened. To date, 27,012,936 social security accounts have been opened.

On the basis of reports for past months received by the Board it was estimated that 1,747,290 new social security accounts would be opened during June. Of this total 1,217,000 are newly opened, 530,000 are new, and 265,100 are re-opened children.

Hour Bill—Sudden death of Ken Conery (D. Mass), chairman of the House Labor Committee and member of the joint committee hearings on the administration's wage and hour program, S. 2475 and H. R. 7200, carriers behind its chief decided effect on the shape that legislation finally will take.

Convery was probably the staunchest protectionist in the ranks of the administration. His draft of the wage and hour legislation, H. R. 7200, through its definition provisions, would apply the requirements for minimum wages, maximum hours and the child labor prohibition against imported products.

The fight for a protection of some sort for domestic producers brought in under the wage and hour legislation against imported products will develop before a law is finally enacted. Because of the policy it is committed to of furtherance of international trade, the Administration may be expected to oppose any move to write into the bill a requirement that foreign goods be produced under the same conditions as domestic commodities.

At the same time, it may be expected that domestic producers, faced with prospects of increased production costs by meeting the proposed requirements of the legislation, and their representatives in Congress, will fight for protection.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Curley and son Jack, motored to Sault Ste. Marie Sunday.

Board interest problems are to be taken up at general sessions, of which there will be three, consisting of an opening luncheon, Tuesday evening banquet and a Saturday morning meeting.

Speaking at the banquet, Walter Greis, former Manistique prison warden, is to present the question of dealing with juvenile delinquency.

Where municipalities stand now, and how their position may be shifted in the future, concerning revenue sources and the functions they must pay for among the levels of federal, state and local government, is to be pictured by Kenneth J. McCarren, member of the Detroit board of assessors, addressing the evening meeting.

Friday. Besides being first vice-president of the municipal league, Mr. McCarren is chairman of the association's taxation committee. New legislation having a bearing on municipal government is the leading topic for the session Saturday morning. At that time, with the legislature closing only with the legislature closing only.

Launching Of Fourth Ferry Boat At Straits Postponed

Murray D. Van Wagoner, state highway commissioner, announced this week a postponement in the launching of the fourth state-owned ferry boat at the Straits of Mackinac.

The commissioner had originally planned to put the new boat, which probably will be christened The City of Cheboygan, into service July 1.

Additional improvements on the boat, not originally anticipated, will probably be christened as the reason for the delay. He said the vessel will not be in service until July 1.

KENTUCKY COAL FIELD SLAYINGS RECALL OLD FEUDS

Indignation boiled over and a force led by D. Boone Logan, a cousin of the slain men, was organized to get the killers.

On June 22, 1887, the Logan forces went into state action at Morehead. The result dwarfed the coal fields most sanguinary encounter, the "Battle of Evans'".

Martins And The 'Coys Write Bloody Chapters In History With 'Feudin'

There are tough ones down in Harlan county, Kentucky, as attested by the tales of shootings, beatings, and killings in the struggle over unionization of the eastern Kentucky coal fields.

Several are nothing compared to accounts of the old feuds in another part of the state in the days when the Tollivers, Hatfields, McCoys, and half a dozen other families were writing bloody chapters in history. They made "feudin'" their life work.

Unless apparently reputable historians have greatly exaggerated the accounts, there has been nothing told about Harlan that could compare with the deeds of the feudists led by Craig Toliver.

"Devil Anse" and his cohorts defied the law and authority of three states for nearly twenty years. Charles G. Mittenberg in his book, "Kentucky's Famous Feuds and Tragedies," says "Devil Anse" was "the chieftain of a daring band of outlaws as ever trod American soil."

Replete with killings, ambushes and cruelty, the Hatfield-McCoy feud reached its climax in the deaths of three McCoys—Phamer, Tolbert, and Young Randolph. History says the three were bound, tortured, tied to sawpulp bunks, and finally shot to death.

Twenty-three men were indicted but it was seven years before any of them was tried. Several then were convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Randolph McCoy, father of the three boys, evaded bodily harm scores of times, although another son and a daughter were slain, his wife beaten, and his home again burned.

In Rowan county from 1884 to 1887, twenty-three men were killed. Men of wealth and business capacity who refused to submit were driven from Morehead, the county seat. In 1885 Morehead was a flourishing town of more than 700 inhabitants.

The doom of the Tollivers was sealed with the slaying of John H. and W. H. Logan at their home four miles from Morehead. Public

State Reemployment Director Points to Need For Skilled Labor

Following the suggestion made in Congressional debate on extending the CCC for another two years this activity might be skillfully adapted in part to include training of enrollees in the useful trades, the need for skilled labor has been pointed out by Major Howard Starnet, state reemployment director.

"Most of these young men, having grown to adulthood during the depression, are without skills of any sort," the director said. "The occupational training they received in the camps evidently is not calculated to fit them for private employment. The market for unskilled labor is glutted and will continue to be for some time. On the other hand, actual labor in some cases, such as horticulture, training in the manual skills, and possibly in other specialties, would offer many of the CCC boys their best chance to find a livelihood and a normal place in society."

ECONOMICS AND THE NEW DEAL

The fundamental principles of New Deal methods of government and economics, were tersely summed up recently by Harry L. Hopkins, federal works progress administrator, in a speech before students at the New York Teachers college.

"I expect to see the day, and it won't take more than 20 years, when the government sees it that one third of the population which is at present insufficiently clothed and fed, will have a decent living standard," declared the administrator. "We have just made a beginning. It's going to cost plenty and the cost will come out of the hides of those earning more than the average income."

That philosophy explains much of what has happened in the past few years and lies at the bottom of much of the labor unrest of today. No sane man enjoys seeing abject poverty and every honest American earning even a small salary is glad to contribute, either through taxes or direct contributions, toward the support of his less fortunate brother. A more equitable system of wealth is desirable, but talk of taking it out of the hides of the small wage earner does not, we believe, set well with the average thinking American.

But when a high government official makes no bones of the fact that it will cost plenty and the cost will come out of the hides of those earning more than the average income, we must be prepared for bigger and better taxes and bigger and better governmental bureaus to furnish jobs for the faithful. Patronsque attitudes should break all records under such a system of government.

WHO CONTRIBUTES TO CELEBRATIONS?

The solicitation for funds to finance the Fourth of July Celebration in Manistique is underway and local merchants are being asked to donate substantial sums of money to defray the expense of the celebration program.

The generosity of Manistique merchants for a worthy cause is proverbial. They have never hesitated to "shell out" to help any movement which will make this community a better place in which to live. The fact that they will always help is sometimes taken as a matter of course. The celebration committee would be well advised to make an amount of money and proceeds to set the local establishments down for the amounts which they are supposed to be able to pay. In most cases the amounts are prorated according to the size of the business.

The local merchant is the backbone of the community. Without his aid we could get nowhere in staging a celebration. But do we always take this into consideration when we buy our merchandise? Those who buy out of town should bear this in mind.

The local merchant not only contributes toward celebrations, but pays taxes for the support of the community. He helps to build the streets and sidewalks and aids materially in maintaining schools and churches. Without his help no worthy white community project would be possible. He makes up the membership of the civic clubs and other organizations pledged to city betterment.

Give the local merchant the consideration he deserves.

A SEASONAL WARNING

Schools throughout Schoolcraft county have closed and the juvenile population is now free to enjoy its long summer vacation.

Coincident with the close of the schools comes the annual summer increase in motor vehicle traffic along city streets and highways. This means that ordinary traffic hazards will be increased and increased to some extent. There will be more children playing on or near the streets. Parents, while of course, make every effort to keep the youngsters at home but it is obviously impossible for a busy housewife to keep close watch every minute. Some of the risks folks will slip away from us into danger from passing traffic.

The average driver, accustomed to proceeding along most of the residential streets without thought of sudden apparitions in front of his wheels, must prepare to alter his driving technique. He must remember to drive with greater care, to exercise greater watchfulness and to have his car under absolute control at all times.

But vacation time is also a perilous period for children in the country. Lakes and rivers allure them to dangerous play. Despite all precautions they will stray far from the watchful eyes of parents. But it is in town where the greatest dangers lie. The motorist must do his part to keep these dangers at a minimum by being even more careful than ever.

BREAKDOWN OF AUTHORITY

Editorial comment throughout the state last week indicated pretty conclusively to a general impression that law and order is at least badly bent and that Governor Frank Murphy has lost considerable prestige through his handling of the labor disputes.

The state's chief executive has been sharply criticized for his failure to stop seizure of five weeks ago of the capitol city by a mob of United Automobile Workers.

Commenting upon the situation the Grand Rapids Chronicle, in a front page editorial entitled "Too Big for Murphy," comments in part as follows:

"And if the governor's attitude is unpopular in Lansing it is far more unpopular in the state outside the capitol. His evident determination to do nothing to offend the CIO even to the extent of permitting unauthorized strikes, labor holidays and other demonstrations that no law on the statute books is to be enforced against the CIO, has eliminated much of the support by virtue of which the governor went into office.

"We have sufficient faith in Michigan to believe that law and order still prevail in this commonwealth. The right of a man to strike is recognized; but the right of a man not to strike when he does not want to strike is important. The community and the state to which he pays taxes should guarantee him that right, and guarantee the public against power-ties and other measures by pressure groups that endanger the public health and safety.

"Nothing could be more unfortunate than the spread in Michigan of the idea of invoking bands of vigilantes in this crisis. Two wrongs have never made a right. The laxity of the state administration is directly responsible for the exciting talk of vigilante action; if it comes the responsibility is on Governor Murphy. But it need not come. A legally organized auxiliary to the police force in every city in the state can legally do the job that was too big for Frank Murphy."

With Michigan playing the field for labor leaders and the football for strike agitators, with the "gentle-voiced union" losing his voice in every crisis, we may add the loss of the tourist trade to the rest of the ills which are assailing us. With daily headlines recounting lawless scenes, the peace-loving tourists of other states will probably develop a blind spot when they look at the map of Michigan.

WOODSMAN KILLED BY FALLING TREE

Jacob Glenn, 66, Dies in Local Hospital Friday Following Accident

Injuries received Friday afternoon resulted in the death Friday evening in the Shaws hospital of Jacob Glenn, 66, a woods worker, who was struck by a falling tree in the woods, eight miles northwest of Thompson.

Glenn and his son, Robert, employed by Albert Foys, had notched a log at 12 o'clock when Glenn started to run to avoid being hit by one of them. He stumbled and fell on his back, his head striking the back. The accident occurred about 4 o'clock.

An ambulance from Manistique carried the injured man to the local hospital, where his death occurred shortly before midnight.

He was born in Canada, in 1871, but had lived in this section where he was employed as a woodsman for many years.

Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at the Gunnison and Kefauver funeral parlors, Rev. S. T. Bottrell, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church officiating. Burial was made in Lakewood cemetery.

THIS WEEK—150 YEARS AGO

The Story of the Constitutional Convention of 1877

By Raymond Pitcairn. Just 150 years ago this week—June 25, 1877—was spoken what modern historians recognize as one of the earliest and clearest statements ever made on "The Spirit of Americanism."

Charles Pinckney

It came from Charles Pinckney, then a delegate from South Carolina, in the course of an eloquent appeal to the Federal Convention, meeting that summer in historic Independence Hall, Philadelphia, to write our Constitution.

Pinckney spoke before a formal session of the Convention which had just adjourned for a recess of several days.

Then contrasting the American nation with established governments abroad, he pointed out that "we have unwisely considered ourselves as the only people of an old instead of a new country."

Charles Pinckney in part "said Pinckney in part, 'are perhaps the most singular of any we are acquainted with. Among them there are few distinctions of fortune or of rank, than among the inhabitants of any other country. Every freeman has a right to the same protection of his person and property. Hence arises a greater equality than is to be found among the people of any other country; and an equality which is more likely to continue, the more the people who enjoy it are united together in the same political body which consists in the power of electing their representatives to office, or of not leaving their voice in the nomination of those who fill it.'"

Lansing, arrived in the city Sunday and as guests at the home of Mrs. Kay's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Lansing.

Miss Mary McLean will leave the city Friday for Ypsilanti where she will attend summer school.

sources of supply. Freight and express rates would naturally increase the price of foods. But this can not explain the high prices of meals in St. Ignace as compared with the same meals in cities considerably farther from the metropolitan centers than the gateway city.

Newcomers to the upper peninsula gain their initial impressions of the district from their brief sojourn in St. Ignace. They naturally think that the prices which prevail there are indicative of the general scale of charges elsewhere. This is obviously unfair to the other communities where reasonable prices are asked. Those who have previously visited Hiron should know what to expect and plan accordingly.

It may be contended that the resort season is short and that high prices must be charged to "ride the wave" during the winter months. But if this is not true in other sections of the peninsula, why should it be necessary in St. Ignace?

Because of these isolated examples of exorbitant charging the upper peninsula has gained a reputation for gouging the visitor within its gates. Deer hunters from lower Michigan once became very unpopular because they brought their kerosene and potatotes with them to their hunting lodges. They became known as "the kerosene can crowd." As time passed, however, they learned that they could purchase these things in most places almost as cheaply as they could in their home communities in lower Michigan.

It might not be a bad idea for some enterprising resort promotion organization to laud a general survey of prices in the various upper peninsula cities for distribu-which has given the north country a bad reputation.

We are getting some fine reports from the different chairmen on the Fourth of July committees. They say that the support given them is very pleasant in every way and that without a doubt this is to be the most gala event staged on the Fourth in Manistique. More fireworks have been purchased than ever before and additional prizes have been put up for passenger car and bicycle decorations. There will be the greased pig, the greasy pole, water fights, penny scrambles, band music and something doing that will be enjoyed and of interest to every one. Fast and slow harness racing has been added to the usual program and several horse owners have already expressed the opinion that they will be in on the generous money allotted for prizes. Manistique is going to have a real bang up celebration.

LOCAL FIRE CHIEF HEADS STATE GROUP

Will Preside At Firemen's Convention To Be Held In Lansing, July 12-15

Charles Underwood, chief of the Manistique fire department, will attend the Michigan State Firemen's Convention and annual fire college at Ludington, July 12-15, where he will preside at convention sessions as president of the state association.

Underwood has been an officer of the state association since 1933, when he was elected third vice president. Since that time, he has advanced in rank each year until last year, at the Alpena convention and he was elected president of the state association.

The fire school held in connection with the convention teaches the proper use of fire equipment, safety measures for firemen, proper care of hose and apparatus, salvage and reduction of fire losses, and first aid and resuscitation. The convention and fire college was held in Manistique in 1934.

Underwood joined the fire department in Manistique January 20, 1919, being hired as chief of the department at that time, a position he has continuously occupied for the past 18 years.

At that time, besides the chief, the department consisted of two paid drivers, each of whom worked a half day on the street department, and two teams of horses, who also worked half of the time on the city streets.

In 1921, the city purchased motorized equipment, one of the first cities in the state to be entirely motorized. Two machines were purchased and two permanent fire men were employed, in addition to the volunteer staff. The county joined the city in fire prevention work in 1928, bought a new truck which the city equipped, and since that time the Manistique department has provided service for the entire county, as well as the city of Manistique.

Last year another permanent employe was added to the force, to permit the firemen to get every third day off duty. At present the firemen are on duty 48 hours, off duty 24 hours in each three day period. Eventually when the two platoon system becomes effective here, firemen will be on duty 24 hours and off duty 24 hours.

Because of the development of the fire department under Underwood's guidance, insurance rates have been materially reduced in the city and fire loss annually in the city is among the lowest in the entire state.

Albino Deer Seen By Local Officials

Four Schoolcraft county road commission officials, while on an inspection tour last Thursday afternoon, saw the albino deer reported seen by several other persons recently in the Thunder Lake area.

The albino deer was seen about a mile south of Thunder Lake on the Thunder Lake road by Commissioners W. L. Middlebrook, Ed Walker, John Goubeau, and Sebastian Weber. They were able to get within a hundred feet of the animal.

The deer, according to their description, is white, with bright pinkish eyes. The animal, which was alone, did not make any effort to run away when the men stopped their car to get a better view.

Work On Police Post Starts Soon

Work on the state police post barracks here is expected to start by the last of July, it has been learned here, following elimination of barriers which have confronted the project.

The final difficulty was the state's request for a deed and abstract for the property upon which the barracks will be built. The site, at the triangle intersection of US-2 and Arbutus avenue, was to be developed for park purposes, stipulated in the original presentation of the property to the city by Benjamin Gero. However, Mr. Gero's decision to make an outright gift of the site to the city, permits the city, in turn, to deed the property to the state.

Lay Faced Brick On Athletic Stadium

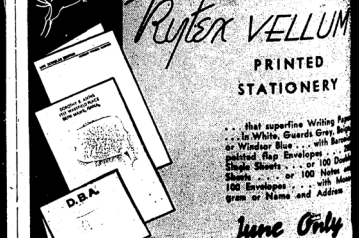

Completion of the faced brick work on the outside walls of the Manistique athletic stadium was made this week, it was announced by A. F. Hall, superintendent of schools. Heavy construction work on the project will be finished with the laying of approximately 300 additional concrete blocks on the inside walls.

The entire structure is expected to be completed by the middle of August, Mr. Hall said. Remaining work includes the flooring, setting of tile, and plumbing. A fence will be erected around the stadium grounds.

GOLLY - THAT GIVES ME AN IDEA - LET'S GET THE GANG.

LAST STAND of the MEXICAN BANDITS

WHEN Lauro Rocha was killed a short time ago, he was called last of the "great" bandit leaders in Mexico. The Zampoapan gang was an offshoot of an earlier and larger band, which had escaped capture and grown unbearably insolent.

Lauro Rocha raided in the state of Jalisco. When he discovered a rancho grande (large ranch) which pleased him with its cattle and its houses, he took it by just moving in, and there was nothing that could be done about it.

He had enough armed followers to occupy almost anything. Local detachments of soldiers were fewer in numbers than his band. Before reinforcements could come, he would be gone—vanished in the hills. But next month he would turn up somewhere else, take all the money, girls and wines in whatever town was convenient, killing a dozen or so natives as a warning, burning whatever seemed to afford an interesting fire.

Rocha's men became known as the "Cristero Rebels." Their numbers and their flouting of law did truly make them insurrectionists, and a surprising number of adventurous, unscrupulous men were pleased to join them.

Rocha passed out of the scene when he dared to go to Mexico City and visit friends. No one knows exactly why he was there. Romance weavers swear he had a particular scnorita in the capital! They describe her as a stage beauty of exquisite charm, a girl with face and figure and—perhaps more important to Rocha's plan—with money.

Another group says he was there on secret intrigue—to confer with this official and that, in the arranging of a coup d'etat—or its Mexican counterpart. By striking effectively here and there at the right moment, by assassinating a man or two, oiling a few important palms with money and promises of high office, Rocha might have been president in short order. It has been done repeatedly, in bizarre old Mexico.

Whatever his mission, he never fulfilled it. Army officers learned that he was visiting in the home of friends in Mexico City, went to the house and shot him dead.

Some time later Rocha's lieutenant was tracked down also. He was Martin Rivera. Hiding at Aguas Calientes until such time as he could safely resume operations, he too was discovered by government agents. A group of them surprised him one night, demanded that he surrender, shot him dead when he refused.

Bandits have never been very gentle with Mexico, and Mexico has never been very gentle with bandits. Tales and lyric poetry and songs crop up about certain "Robin Hood" types of outlaws down below the Rio Grande but they rarely are genuine heroes.

A few, notably Villa, would diplomatically rob the rich to "aid and protect" the poor. But when his own ends dictated robbing the poor, Villa wouldn't hesitate. Nor would the other "Robin Hoods of Mexico."

By Oren Arnold

THE village was strangely quiet when the bandits galloped in. Only three or four people and a few dogs were visible. These scurried to cover, terrified by the shots and the shooting.

The raiders did not at once start to pillaging, but went first to the town's only saloon. Their horses were hitched out front, and the dozen swaggering, dangerous men stalked inside.

Bang! The leader announced their arrival with a pistol shot. He didn't notice that the room was empty of people, save for the bartender who promptly held up his hands, trembling.

The bandits roared in laughter. Then they stacked their rifles against the walls, holstered their pistols, sat down for refreshments which the barkeeper made haste to bring. Secure in their numbers, and by having already intimidated the village folk, they posted no guard.

Outside, however, men and women were darting furtively toward the saloon. The villagers themselves were silently gathering!

Keeping below the window sills and moving quietly, they soon were pressed against the very walls of the place. Some carried guns. Some had machetes, butcher knives, daggers. Some had nothing but pitchforks, hoes or clubs. All of them watched Jesus Maldonado, infuriated citizens poured into the saloon, anxious to fight, to kill. For a few moments the place was a melee of fighting and shouting and cursing and shooting.

their leader. Cautiously he peered through the door.

"Ho!" Maldonado yelled the signal.

Instantly shots were fired through the door and windows.

In the same moment, infuriated citizens poured into the saloon, weapons high, anxious to fight, to kill.

The bandits jumped to defend themselves. Caught entirely by surprise, they could do little.

FOR a few moments the place was a melee of fighting and shouting and cursing and shooting. The villagers were less effective than they might have been, for they crowded so from behind that they were too confused and tangled to fight their best. Among them, quite by chance, was an adventurous American, who at the moment suffered acutely from homesickness—so he told later.

In the confusion the bandits scattered, battling and running as best they could to escape the slaughter.

Five of them were killed—butchered rather unnecessarily, but impressively nevertheless.

The thieves were utterly routed, and it is highly unlikely that they will be organized again. The little village of Zampoapan, in the Mexican state of Vera Cruz, has rather proudly announced that it is henceforth and forever civilized, and so bandits beware.

The citizens waited some time to make their purging effort. This same gang of roving outlaws had raided the town with routine regularity, many times.

The few police and soldiers in and near the little community were powerless. Official Mexico City, bothered by many weighty matters, had not got around to sending a larger contingent of soldiers. So in desperation citizen Jesus Maldonado organized his own neighbors and friends, led the attack that thoroughly broke up the outlaw band.

This gang of cutthroats was one of the last bands known to be at liberty in all of Mexico. Twenty years ago, or even 10 years, the nation was overrun with them. They took advantage of the frequent political upheavals there. They became "patriots" if some politician hired them, "insurrectos" if they happened to oppose the existing office holders.

Recent presidents, especially Lazaro Cardenas, have pushed strong policies of social betterment. The bandits have been finding life in Mexico one of increasing hard times.

Chinese Ring Smashed

Intrepid U. S. Customs Men "Join" Chinese Smugglers and Capture Gang

By C. S. Van Dresser

"MY ESTEEMED friend," said the cultured Chinese in soft tones, "I do not believe as you Americans so aptly put it, that you will 'double cross' me. You have been in Seattle some time now, is it not so? Then you must be familiar with the customs of my people. Doubtless you have heard of the 'death of the seven heavens'? Delightful to contemplate. Ah, you shudder."

The suave, mild-appearing Oriental, Chin Wah, spoke smoothly, almost caressingly, to Customs Agent Melvin L. Hanks as they sat in the Federal man's parked car at midnight on a dimly lit, almost deserted street in Seattle's Chinatown.

To look at the quiet, unassuming Oriental it would have been incredible to believe that he was the head of one of the most vicious opium-smuggling rings that ever operated on the Pacific Coast.

Chin Wah's organization was a widespread, smooth running piece of machinery that was constantly spreading poison in the form of opium, morphine and heroin to half the West Coast and as far East as Chicago and Detroit.

"But to talk of more pleasant things," continued the slant-eyed opium racketeer. "We have watched you and have decided that you will be very useful to us. You have inferred that you will be able to obviate the necessity of having the boats of the so efficient Coast Guard follow too closely the vessels of the Blue Funnel Line as they enter Puget Sound. That procedure has been very embarrassing to us in the past and you will be paid well to stop it. I venture to believe that $50,000 is an intriguing sum for five year's work."

"Don't worry about my part, Chin Wah," the agent replied. "I'll play ball with you. What's the next move?"

"Do not be in a hurry, my dear Sergeant Hanks. It is written that 'he who hurries to cultivate the rice fields may, in his zeal, destroy the tender plants.' Within the month I shall telephone you, and so there may be no mistake, shall use the word 'Bellingham.' You comprehend?"

"O. K., Chin Wah. You're Mr. Bellingham."

"It is agreed, then. Until I telephone. But do not forget my little warning, or shall we say, advice. To a hatchman $100 is a princely sum. This most unworthy person bids you good evening."

The Oriental slipped quietly out of the car and disappeared into the night.

For a while Melvin Hanks remained in thought. Would the risk be worth it? What if he were discovered? He shuddered at the consequences. Chin Wah's organization was a huge and ruthless one, and if he failed in what the Chinese considered his obligation, revenge would be swift and terrible, or as Chin Wah hinted, slow and terrible. Well, the die was cast. The agent shrugged his shoulders, started his car and drove home.

He phoned the Super: "O. K., Chief. I made it."

"Good boy," congratulated the Super. "But watch your step. You know what has happened to some of the officers in this division before."

Melvin Hanks hung up the receiver. The click of the instrument as it returned to its cradle seemed like a momentous signal. For the customs agent had embarked on one of the most bizarre and dangerous adventures ever recorded in the annals of that hazardous branch of the Federal Government.

For a month the customs man went about his usual duties without hearing from the Oriental dope boss. It began to look as if Chin Wah had decided not to trust him and the chance to smash the opium ring had vanished.

Then, on a December evening his phone rang. "This is Mr. Bellingham, Sergeant Hanks," announced Chin Wah in sybillant tones. "Will you please meet

While the two Chinese dope racketeers talked to Hank, another agent was hidden in the rumble seat and listened in secretly.

This is another of the series of "inside" true stories on how the United States Customs Agents wage a successful war on dope racketeers and smugglers.

me at the same place, at the same hour Friday night? That will be three days from now."

"Right, Mr. Bellingham. I'll be there." The next morning he apprehensively approached his Chief.

"Listen, Boss. I'm to meet Chin Wah Friday night in my car. If we're going to get anywhere in this case, we've got to have a witness to that conversation."

"I'll grant you that, Hanks," returned the Super. "But you can't install a recording phonograph in your bus. It'll make too much noise, so how are you going to get a witness?"

"I've got it all figured out, Chief. Now, let me finish before you explode." Hanks outlined his scheme, while the Super listened. When he concluded, the Chief did explode.

"Hell, man!" he said. "I wouldn't order any officer of my detail to pull a stunt like that! You might get away with it, but if that damn Chinaman even suspected what was going on, you'd both wake up some morning with your heads bashed in, and I'm not kidding myself into thinking I can save you."

"I know, Chief, but George agreed to do it on his own."

"All right; all right," reluctantly agreed the Super. "But just the same, I think it's screwy."

What the Chief said about getting his head bashed in was no joke, and Hanks knew it. He also realized in what danger he was placing his brother officer, G. C. Polite, in carrying out the plan.

What the two Federal agents planned was that Polite was to hide in the rumble seat of Hanks' coupe and take down in shorthand what went on between the customs agent and the Oriental drug boss. The plan was daring in its simplicity—the trouble was that it was too simple, but Chin Wah had not thought to look in the rumble seat the first time, and might not the second.

On the fateful Friday night, Agent G. C. Polite climbed into the back of the car equipped with a shielded flashlight, pad and pencil.

With that he started for the meeting.

Chin Wah was not alone this time, he brought his chief lieutenant, a fellow Oriental, Chin Pak. The Chinese boss asked Hanks point blank if he could call off the Coast Guard cutters next week when the Blue Funnel steamship Tantalus was due in Seattle. Hanks agreed and accepted two $100 bills as part payment on an agreed $900 bribe. At the close of the deal the Chinese lieutenant, Chin Pak, reiterated his boss' threat about double crossing. His language was a bit more graphic than Chin Wah's for he was an Oriental of lower caste.

The ruse was not discovered, and the two agents had forged the first link in the chain that was to eventually convict the entire opium ring.

The Federal men learned step by step that Chin Pak was next in command of the gang; that Chin Hong and Mar Poy, Chinese residents of Seattle without visible means of support, were minor members of the ring; that James Carroll, Spiro Backus and W. L. Sischo, unsavory characters of the waterfront, were the "runners" of the dope from the Blue Funnel vessels to the home of the lieutenant, Chin Pak, where it was stored for further distribution inland.

On January 6, 1935, more than a year after Hanks had entered into this dangerous game, he got the chance to round up his last necessary bit of evidence, for the Chinese dope boss asked him to run a load of contraband to Chicago.

Three weeks later that indomitable pair, Hanks and Polite, left for Chicago with eighty tins of opium. Chin Wah followed on another train. The two customs agents checked in a pre-arranged hotel, taking adjoining rooms. Hanks' quarters were wired with a dictograph and a conversation recording device. They could use the equipment this time, for the machinery was in the next room.

Chin Wah appeared as per schedule and introduced his Chicago agent, Chin Guey. For two weeks Hanks made deliveries in Chicago, and several times in Detroit—all conversations in his room were recorded by Polite. When all the eighty tins had been delivered Hanks engineered the last damning piece of evidence—he arranged to have a $720 bribe paid in his hotel room.

Back in Seattle a week later, on the evening of February 23, 1935, things came to a climax. The steamship Tantalus was to arrive at 10 at night and aboard her was a load of opium destined for Chin Wah. Hanks, in complete charge of the Seattle customs detail now, arranged a Reception Committee that was to give that racketeering Oriental and his gang the surprise of their lives.

The intrepid customs men waited on the pier as the ship slowly docked. Then some of them boarded her, and in a moment a shot was fired—the signal that the seizure had been made. Hanks, on the deck, fired a flare pistol and the whole scene was bathed in brilliant light. Under its radiance, James Carroll, one of the runners, was seen at the stern of the vessel in a rowboat. He was immediately captured by Coast Guard cutters assembled for the purpose. W. L. Sischo, another runner, made good his escape temporarily, in a fast motorboat, returning the fire of the Coast Guard. He was later captured.

Meanwhile, agents in Seattle swooped down on the dope gang's headquarters and captured the lot of them. There were eleven men in that ring, and every one was jailed.

Thus through the vigilance, determination, brains and sheer courage of two men who for more than a year lived in constant danger of their lives, was completely smashed one of the largest and most sinister of dope smuggling gangs that ever operated on the Pacific Coast.

Lend Us a Star!

By Jeannette Meehan

HOLLYWOOD.

YOU'VE seen them often—those little items which appear in some obscure corner of a trade paper or lacked on the end of some Hollywood column, just to fill up space. They read something like this—"Warner Bros. have borrowed Horatio Hero from M-G-M to star opposite Hilda Heroine in Warner's wonder-spectacle, 'Song for Susie'."

Nothing unusual about it—and yet that one short, untrimmed sentence is a brief summary of what probably has been a two-months' siege of conferences, bids, pledges, contracts and aspirins.

Why borrow a star? Let's take a concrete example. Paramount has spent a good many thousand dollars on the preparation of a period picture titled "Buccaneer." It was many weeks before the picture was to begin that Paramount realized that the only star on the lot suited to the role, Gary Cooper, would be working in "Souls at Sea" long enough to mess up the release date of "Buccaneer" if the company had to wait for him.

Well—borrowing is better than waiting.

A swashbuckling hero? Who better than Clark Gable? So the studio throws out a "feeler" and at first it's all very informal.

Things proceed something like this. A Paramount executive, a big one and a diplomat (usually Henry Herzburn), calls up an M-G-M executive (a big one) and invites him to lunch. So they have lunch, and throughout the greater part of the meal they talk about everything except the thing they came for. About French pastry time, Mr. Herzburn remarks, sort of off-hand-like, "By the way, how's Clark Gable doing? Swell, eh? I'm glad to hear it." So they both agree that Mr. Gable is doing all right.

Other "feelers" follow in rather routine order. Is the star very busy at M-G-M? How many pictures has he to make on this year's program? How soon will he have any time off? Then, at last—the real point! Paramount would like to borrow him for "Buccaneer."

It has all been very pleasant and friendly. They shake hands and it's a gentleman's agreement that, if circumstances prove propitious, it's a deal.

In this case Paramount didn't get the star they wanted because he had too many commitments at his own studio, but let's assume that they did.

FROM that luncheon on, things cease to be informal and are conducted along a definite course of procedure. It works the same way at all studios. The matter is taken up with the bigwigs in the front office. If they find the star is free, with no pictures pending at the time Paramount wants him, M-

G-M guarantees to deliver him on a certain date, "pending certain agreements."

Those "certain agreements" cover a lot of ground. The studio on the lending side of the transaction is in the driver's seat. Paramount must send over the script, and if M-G-M doesn't like it the deal is off, unless Paramount consents to change it.

Then there's the time element. If the M-G-M star goes to Paramount on July 1, and his own studio wants him for a picture on August 15, Paramount must guarantee to finish with him at that date. If they don't, which is usually the case, Paramount's production schedule defers to M-G-M's. The star returns to his own studio and the borrower has to juggle the shooting program to catch the star in odd moments or on a day off between scenes.

Then there's the "billing." And what a problem that can be! The matter of billing has been known to hold up a loan-out for half a year. You may have been wondering where the star himself comes in. Don't worry, he "comes in," all right, and he enters with the billing.

Not so long ago two stars were to appear in a picture together on the Fox lot, the lady on a loan-out from another studio. Both their contracts with their own studios called for star billing, their names to appear "in solo," "above and before the title."

Now these two stars were very good friends. In fact they were romantically attached. But since actors seldom allow friendship to interfere with business, they both held out for top billing. They went right on dining and dancing together, while their respective studios dickered and demanded. In this case the lady won.

Usually, however, this problem is settled by giving both stars equal billing—but lend your ears. Not only does the star on loan get equal billing on the screen, but in "all matters including advertising, exploitation and publicity."

Thus, if the studio who borrows Robert Taylor has agreed to this, and they always do—and then someone sends out an advertising poster which says—"Coming SALLY BROWN in 'HOWS MY FRENCH' with Robert Taylor"—that studio will have a sizable suit on its hands.

THE studio that loans a star also has a say-so about the director, producer and cast of the picture in which their star is to appear. So does the star.

When all these matters have been amicably settled by the two studios, the star is called in. He reads the script and is told of the various conditions under which he is to be loaned. If he agrees unreservedly, it's a deal.

But the star may throw the screws in the whole business. He may want the script changed even after his own studio has had it revised twice. Carole Lombard once had an entire script rewritten before she would consent to be loaned to Universal. She even picked the writers she wanted to work on it.

Ida Lupino (right) is a valuable property at Paramount because she has spent a year away from the studio on loan-outs—at double her pay. . . . Clark Gable once was loaned to Columbia by M-G-M as a disciplinary measure. For Columbia he starred in "It Happened One Night," with Claudette Colbert, upper left—and won the Academy award!

When Kay Francis and Claudette Colbert go out on loan they want to okay the proofs of all portrait and publicity stills. Most stars take along their own stand-ins. Carole Lombard wants to take along her pet cameraman from Paramount and Marlene Dietrich wants to take along the girl who does her hair and the woman who puts on her make-up, and the studio that borrows them pays the bills—and is very glad to do it.

Very few contracts allow a star the privilege of turning down a loan-out deal, but if the actor raises a row, and is sincere about it, nine times out of 10 he can get out of it—then the whole thing is off and everyone is right back where they started from.

In the case of "Buccaneer," when Paramount couldn't get Gable from M-G-M, or Errol Flynn from Warners, they signed Fredric March, who is a free lance star.

WHY lend a star? Well, why not? It's a matter of dollars and building personalities. The studio that borrows a star pays the studio that lends her DOUBLE her salary—which, considering the lofty figures of stars' salaries, runs to a tidy sum indeed.

Suppose someone should borrow Greta Garbo, whose salary is in the neighborhood of $11,000 a week. M-

G-M would receive $22,000 for every week she was off the lot. Of this sum the studio would receive one-half, the star one-half. That is the accepted policy among Hollywood studios, although there is no law governing the sum to be paid a borrowed star.

On the whole, producers as well as stars consider this borrowing and loaning business a "healthy arrangement." For example, when Walter Wanger lent Madeline Carroll to 20th Century-Fox for "Loyds of London" and "On the Avenue," and later to David Selznick for "Prisoner of Zenda," he knew Miss Carroll would return to him a bigger and better star, with a larger public following and a background of additional experience.

However, producers are not above a little discipline for stars. M-G-M once sent Clark Gable over to Columbia as a "spanky." Clark had been ill and the studio thought he was stalling, so the latter thought to teach him a lesson by farming him out to a smaller studio.

Mr. Gable took himself over to Columbia, in the wake of a rather chilly breeze—and appeared in "It Happened One Night," for which he received the Academy award for the best male performance of the year.

Sometimes you run into a rather surprising scale of values.

Porter Hall and Ida Lupino are two of Paramount's really valuable properties, yet there was a 12-month period when neither of them made a picture on their home lot. They were out on loans all that time—at double their salaries.

Love Was More Important to This Night Club Singer
Than the Spotlight of Acclaim

LARRY BENTLEY was foremost of the little cluster about the entertainers' entrance. His mouth was open. His eyes were wide with surprise. He watched, as every one from the cook's helper to the most bejeweled customer was watching, the figure of the slim girl beside the piano. He listened, as they all listened, and if he trembled a little more than any other of Virginia Gordon's thrilled audience, it was because he was losing a very important bet.

When she had finished her song she looked toward Larry. Her eyes shone. Her face was flushed, radiant. She started toward him through a wave of deafening applause, not the least of which was contributed by that young man in white tie and tails.

Then she was called for an encore and another. After that she ran off the floor of the supper club and Larry caught her in his arms.

"Darling!" she exclaimed breathlessly as they pushed through the cooks and busboys gathered in the alley to the dressing rooms.

His voice was husky. "Jinny! You've been holding out on a pal! Where did you learn to sing like that?"

Impetuously, she kissed his cheek. "Come in a minute, Larry," she said and pushed open the door of her room.

He followed, grinning broadly yet with just a tinge of furtive pain in his eyes. That bet had seemed such a good idea.

He shut the door against the familiar strains of the orchestra swinging a tune.

"Well," he said, "I concede the bet. I've been doing the yodling in this place so long, I guess I got swell-headed. I never thought there might be other voices beside mine."

She looked back at him through the mirror where she was trying to effect an arrangement between heightened natural color, flushed with the enthusiastic acceptance of her song, and her make-up.

with chagrin. "That you could take my place on a song and get a better hand than I did. Or if you lost, then we'd set

Geegee grinned down at Larry as he danced with Jinny. He waved

Larry?" he asked

Jinny, you're awfully cool about this. After all, it's a big thing."

"Yes," she agreed, "a big thing."

"Then," he said, "get excited! Be happy! Smile!"

"My, Larry, you look so tragic. Why don't you do the same? Personally, I withhold those emotions for something really important."

"Important!" he exclaimed.

Then the discussion dropped as he took her coat from the check girl and held it for her.

"Where to?" he asked hoarsely.

"Oh-h, we might ride around. Or come to my apartment, Larry. I'll make coffee. You mentioned a while ago that you had something to say, after I had my contract."

He looked at her curiously, doubtfully, after they were in the cab.

"Sa-ay, what in the world's got into you?"

"I DON'T know what you mean. Perhaps," she suggested brightly, "my success has gone to my head. It is success, you know, to jump suddenly from a mediocre dancing job into such a position as that with Geegee. And did you notice the way Geegee looked at me? After I sang, I mean. He wasn't so respectful before."

"All right," said Larry gruffly. "You've got your contract. And maybe you've got Geegee. Only remember," he cautioned, "he's already got as many wives as the law allows."

"Larry?" she asked after a moment.

"Yes?"

"Are you glad?"

"Glad about what? Geegee?"

"Of course not? Are you glad I'm successful about the contract?"

"It's lucky. It's a good thing. It's—"

"But are you glad? You haven't done anything for the last five minutes but growl."

He turned on her savagely.

"I am not glad!" he said loudly. "I'm unhappy! I wish you had mumps today! I wish—"

"You're shouting," she reminded him sweetly and he shut up like a clam.

After they were in the apartment he watched her morosely. She had an expert manner of managing even such things as pouring water from a kettle to a percolator. The odor of coffee began to fill the room. Then she brought out little squares of toast with jelly spread on them.

The whole atmosphere of this late supper was so domestic it was like turning a weapon in a new wound within his breast. After the sixth or seventh little square of toast he grinned a little ruefully.

"Forgive me for barking tonight, Jinny."

She arched her eyebrows and poured another coffee for him.

"I didn't jilt you," he exclaimed. "Good L—"

She was gone a full five minutes and when she returned she looked neither less nor more beautiful than she had been before. In fact, no change was evident from the standpoint of masculine eyes, but that may have been due to the ways of maids and mirrors.

When she did sing, she gave a better performance than she had earlier in the evening. She was encored twice and Larry was jubilant. Geegee's eyes were moist with enthusiasm.

He went to talk with the waiter. "And you, too, Larry?" Larry was grinning all over. If he had had a tail to wag, he surely would have wagged it.

with chagrin, "that you could take my place on a song and get a better hand than I did. Or if you lost, then we'd get married. Well, you won, Jinny-girl. So we don't get married. But I'm glad for you," he added with hasty, awkward sincerity.

She looked at him archly. "Glad, because I won't have to marry you?" she asked. "But I'm going to marry you anyway. You know I wouldn't hold you to such a bet. Besides, Larry Bentley, do you think I want to do nothing but work all my life?"

She said the words lightly, smiling into the glass. Larry did not reply. He drew a cigarette case, extracted one and tapped it thoughtfully. Still he did not speak. He flicked a lighter and puffed smoke slowly.

Jinny looked around curiously. "Larry!"

He grinned bravely. "Huh?"

"You are going to marry me, anyway?" "We'll talk about it later. I've one more song and then we'll find a little restaurant and eat spaghetti and cheese with a little—"

"Larry Bentley! What are you thinking?"

His grin quivered. "I'm thinking your voice is big time, Jinny. Big time. Now, give me a kiss and stop arguing. I've gotta go to work."

She tilted her head and he bent to kiss her. His lips just brushed hers, then suddenly he crushed her to him. A stifled sound escaped his lips, almost a sob. It was such a kiss as a man might give where he expected no more of his might follow.

Then he whirled. The tail of his black coat flicked in the doorway and the door shut after his passage. He went through his act thoroughly but without heart. He was not surprised that the applause, though generous, was far less than that which had been the girl's reward.

WHEN he went directly to the mussy little dressing room of his own and quickly changed the white tie for one of black and substituted tuxedo coat and vest for the more formal attire in which he sang and danced. As he straightened the tie before his three-sided mirror, there was a rattling knock on the door.

He called and Sam Portman came in. Sam had a little black mustache, two sharp little dark eyes, a generous figure and nearly bald head.

"Larry," he said without preliminary, "you gotta help me."

"The younger man did not turn around. "She wouldn't sign your contract?" he asked with faint bitterness.

The other man started at the question. "How did you know I offered her one?" he asked suspiciously. "Did you—"

"No, I didn't," Larry said with an air of weariness.

"Hmm. She says she's going to get married, Bentley."

LARRY? he asked

Larry accepted the information without emotion.

"That's what she says."

"It'll be a crime!" Sam exclaimed virtuously.

"The gal's free, white and twenty-one, Sammy. What did you offer her?"

"That's my business."

"All right. Then run along. I'm busy. You can make it your business to get her signature on the dotted line."

The supper-club operator looked dubiously on his singer. It was obvious that he suspected Larry of knowing more about Virginia Gordon's avowed intention of marriage than the young singer had told him.

"All right," he agreed reluctantly. "Forty-five a week."

Larry grinned from ear to ear. He looked at Portman and winked slowly.

"Sammy," he said reproachfully, "you should be ashamed of yourself! Forty-five! My, my, my!"

Sam Portman reddened to his ears.

"Listen, Bentley," he said harshly, "you may have a little something to think about yourself when your contract's up."

"You mean my job?"

"I mean your job," the other said aggressively. "Now you find out who the guy is. I think you know. I think you're it, Bentley." The latter gave no sign. "Then let me know. And you talk things over with her—tonight. I'll go up a little—"

"You bet you will!" Larry said, rising quickly. "You know what's she's worth and so do I. And another thing, little man," he said, stepping threateningly forward and experiencing keen personal pleasure as the operator retreated, "you can take my job out to the kitchen and have the cook stuff a duck with it!"

LARRY ducked but, felt the angry pulsing of blood in his veins, but he stilled it and, after knocking and having his entrance O. K'd, he entered her room with his usual light grin.

"Ready?"

"On my toes," she said gayly. "Where to?"

"First, we'll have dinner together,

Jinny. And a little talk about that matter."

"Larry, you seem too serious. Please don't take that bet like you're doing."

"Then," he continued, tucking her arm through his and sweeping by the aggrieved Mr. Portman. "We may go out and dance a bit. Sort of postman's holiday. Just you and I. How about it?"

"Well," she said thoughtfully, "I know. He wants me to give you some advice. A la Portman. I should say you shouldn't sign it! Forty-five a week! You'll get a hundred. Or one-fifty. And at that you won't sign for more than six months. You're going in the money, Jinny!"

She sat up; a straight, stiff, determined little figure at his side.

"Larry," she exclaimed almost pleadingly, "I am not! Will you stop acting like a—like a jackass!"

"Tut, tut, little lady."

Later his arguments met the resistance of silence; a moody, somewhat angry silence. Larry's nerves were already as taut as a string wire. He was not deceiving himself when he told her she should go up; she was above his class and, even though they had had certain dreams about sharing a small apartment, she should not hesitate.

"Suppose," she said thoughtfully, "I am, as you say, above your class, Larry. Suppose I should take this step. What would you do?"

"Oh—h—jig along as I have."

He looked dubious.

"You've got a real voice, Jinny. There'll be bigger comets than me trailing your star."

"In other words, you'll give me up—for my own good?"

Her voice was edged with sarcasm. "Jinny, stop talking like a little fool!" he said sharply, nervously. "You don't know what you're speaking of!"

"Oh, don't I?" she asked with a tremulous laugh and rose from the table, gathering her coat about her before he could come to her side.

"Where are you going?" he asked.

"Why, Mr. Bentley!" she exclaimed in feigned astonishment, "I thought we were going to a dance. Something pleasant. Just for you and me. Perhaps we'll celebrate our very practical decision!"

She smiled up at him with that same cool self-possession she had exhibited before the microphone.

"Larry," she said reproachfully, "you know I wouldn't let you down. I know how much it means to you. And I know, too, Larry," she added softly, "how much it hurts to be let down."

A voice interrupted their tete-a-tete as the sparks started generating.

"Miss Gordon. Excuse me. There's a gentleman wishes to speak with you urgently. Excuse me sir," the callboy added apologetically to Larry.

Jinny said with evident excitement, "Larry, come along. I smell the contract. What'll I ask?"

"Not less than one-fifty to start. Limit it. Say two months with an option of renewal," said Larry quickly, although his spirits sagged to a new low. He wished the offer might have been delayed, at least until the end of the dance.

He said gently, "You won't fail, Jinny. Sam Portman is all ready to sign you. But I believe you can do better elsewhere. You won't fail, Jinny," he repeated. "Let's look at it sportingly."

"Sportingly!" she flared.

The cab stopped before a great hotel and they went in to one of the ballrooms—that in which Geegee Martin and his orchestra were playing to a throng-filled room.

Geegee grinned down at Larry as he danced by with Jinny. He waved his baton.

"How about giving us a song, Larry?" Geegee called.

Larry maneuvered the girl to the edge of the rostrum.

"Geegee," he said, "meet Miss Gordon and offer thanks to all the family devils of orchestra leaders that I introduced you! She'll sing for you."

A shade of doubt crossed Martin's face as if, in one part of his mind, he thought of a select, critical crowd and in another the situation of getting a possible amateur before the microphone. But there was a reassuring note of pride in Larry's introduction.

Jinny said nothing beyond acknowledging Geegee's salutation. Her eyes were veiled in thought.

"Will you, Miss Gordon?" Geegee asked.

"If Mr. Bentley doesn't mind," she said sweetly, and added in an aside for Larry's benefit, "any more than he appears to!"

Larry was smiling all over. If he had had a tail to wag, he surely would have wagged it.

me and given— "I didn't jilt you," he exclaimed. "Good L—"

"Larry! The neighbors' voices shouting."

"I'll shout all I damn please, Jinny, girl! Can't you understand—"

She slid into his lap and her eyes looked into his seriously. She did not smile, now.

"I think I do," she said in a low voice. "You do love me, don't you, Larry?"

"You've guessed the answer to that one. I can tell you now."

"Because I'm contracted. Because I can't change my mind."

"Exactly," he said as dully as he might have acknowledged the end of the world around the next corner.

"Larry, if you were to do again what you've done this evening, would you?"

He said, half-angrily, "Listen, Jinny. Do you mind not talking any more about it? You're in big time, now. You've got a lot of dizzy ideas and one of 'em is a seventy-five-a-week song-and-dance man. When you make a change of scene like this—"

He was interrupted by the sudden jangle of a telephone and with a quick apology she slipped from his lap. A moment later he heard her voice at the instrument. Then she called:

"Darling, it's for you."

"For me?" Larry exclaimed.

"Yes. He's been trying to get you all over town. And he just put two and two together and thought maybe he'd try—"

"Who?"

"Why, the man on the phone, Larry," she said provocatively and, as he approached, she kept the speaker covered.

"But answer my question first. If you had to do all this over, would you?"

"Not for a million dollars!" he exclaimed fervently, and she laughingly relinquished the instrument.

He called, "Hello? . . . Yes. . . What? . . . Oh, hello, Geegee. . . You what?"

He explained, "You want who to sign what contract?"

WHEN he had received the answer he hung the receiver slowly, without regard for the persistent buzz from Geegee Martin on the other end. He returned to the living room where was the wreckage of what had been many little squares of toast with jelly.

"Jinny," he asked accusingly, "was that contract a phony?"

Jinny was tearing a particular paper into long strips. She did not turn as he came up behind her but spoke reminiscently.

"Darling," she said, "don't you think Mr. Lincoln was an— an impressive man? So businesslike. So efficient. I think I'll be the same. I'll keep household accounts. And budgets. And I'll charge off the $15 I paid him to 'Necessities for the Home.' What do you say?"

Larry was, for the moment, completely and effectually silenced. He just nodded rather dazedly.

Part IV

IN the spring of 1935 the interest which the outside world was showing on the quintuplets began to force itself on our attention in a way we could not ignore. Witness my diary:

"April 2. Visitors coming by the hundreds. They come in and look at the babes through the observation window in the hall, and go out by the kitchen door. The babes are beginning to notice them and in spite of our warnings—'No tapping on windows, no calling, no funny faces'—people forget themselves and scream with joy every time they even move. The visitors are very impressed with the healthy appearance of the quins and one woman went so far as to say to her companion: 'I'll bet that coloring isn't natural—they must use rouge.'"

The next day's entry records a minor mishap to the good doctor.

"April 3. Dr. Dafoe's car was stolen last night. He came chugging in in a broken down old model which could hardly make the grade. . . . The babes are slightly cranky today."

Further entries:

"April 8. The babies seem to feel the excitement of the visitors and are very agitated after the hour is over. They do so try to be entertaining that it makes them tired."

"April 10. Visitors have been stopped. It is such a blessing all round. The children are quieter and we can at least sit down for an hour. We spread blankets on the floor and let them roll around. It is funny to see the positions they get into and to see them roll around the floor until we have to bring them back again."

"Mr. and Mrs. Dionne have come over once or twice and sat on the floor with them."

Then developed another of those crises that were forever popping up in the first year of the little girls' lives.

"April 17. Emilie has a cold. No visitors of any kind are allowed. She looks so pathetic with her running nose and her bleary eyes—but she still laughs."

"April 18. The babes are all developing colds. We have put them all to bed. We have been busy making extra pillows and finding enough nighties to go around. Their poor little noses are sore from running, and they have such difficulty in swallowing and breathing—at night I'm afraid to nap for fear of them choking."

"In spite of being sick the children are still grand little angels. We find them all over. Cecile insists on going down to the foot of the bed, under the covers. I think, we pull her up at least a dozen times a day."

"April 20. Babes are still sick but Marie seems very much worse than the others. She is restless and whines—her temperature is high and nothing we do seems to make her feel better.

"APRIL 21. Easter Sunday—but no dressing up. We did try a bonnet we received for Yvonne on them all, but their pale little faces look so pathetic. They are all better, though, except Marie. Emilie is apparently normal."

"April 22. Marie is still sick and has us very worried. If she could only talk. . . . The doctor phoned his brother (Dr. William Dafoe, of Toronto) and Dr. Allan Brown; they will be here some time during the night. The doctor thinks Marie's ears are troubling her, and wishes to have a specialist look at her."

"April 23. Dr. Allan Brown and Dr. William Dafoe motored down from Toronto to examine the babes. We had to waken each one in turn, take her out to the kitchen and let her be thoroughly examined—and each behaved splendidly. They all went back to bed and went right to sleep. Marie's ears were troubling her. They did a paracentesis; she cried, but seemed so relieved when it was all over, and slept so well. The doctors went back to Toronto, leaving at 6 a. m."

"The parents refuse to believe the verdict that except for Marie's ears the babes are all normal, and insist on having one or two of their doctors examine them. So Dr. Smith is coming in in the morning."

"April 24. Dr. Smith was in this morning. He states that the babes are in perfect condition and a credit to the staff. The only thing wrong is Marie's ears, which are running very little and which he thinks are of no concern.

"April 25. The babes are all better, and went out today. They do so love going out, and had much more pep when brought in."

My diary seems to lack day-by-day entries for May, 1935. Instead it contains one rather long undated entry, written at the time that the little girls finished their first year of life. It follows:

"It is just one year since the babes were born. To see them now, looking so big and healthy and beginning to take a great interest in their surroundings, one can hardly believe that they were so small and so frail that we could hardly breathe when near them."

"They look so very pretty when we dress them in light dresses and sweaters, with frilly bonnets. They smell so wonderfully good (of course, with the care we give them, they should!) and their skins are so delightful. Their eyes are getting more beautiful every day."

"WHEN the birthday pictures were taken they had a grand time. They all went after the cakes; Yvonne had two fistfuls and couldn't decide which fist to suck on. Marie was very dainty, taking pinches instead of fistfuls. When they saw themselves in a mirror they smiled and were pleased because the 'bebes' smiled back at them."

"Madam de Kiriline, who is very tired after a year of strenuous work—and of wonderful organizing—has decided to leave. It is now deemed necessary to have a French Catholic nurse, too."

And so the first year of the youngsters' lives ended and a new one was begun. Miss Lamoureux replaced

Madame de Kiriline and the summer began smoothly.

"June 15. We are showing the babes on the veranda now. We take them out one at a time and hold them up. The crowd goes wild, but we try to make the girls pay little attention to them."

"June 28. Babes are making much progress. Yvonne and Cecile can stand now, and take a few steps. The heat is very hard on them all—and we still have trouble with mosquitoes."

"July 3. The heat is terrible. The babes have no appetite and are losing weight in spite of all our precautions. . . . They are very good, though, and do very little crying."

"July 15. Am leaving for a month's holiday, but can hardly bear to leave the babes."

"Aug. 15. Back at work. The babes recognized me after a few minutes. They look thinner. I'm told they weren't well."

"Aug. 21. The doctor is convinced that four shows a day are too much for the babes. They are so nervous and irritable, and don't sleep as they should."

"Aug. 22. Shows cut to two a day. We already notice a difference. The babes are quieter, and slept much better today. They seem peppier, too."

"Sept. 1. Walking lessons continue and everyone is gaining in strength and confidence."

Before 1935 ended the quintuplets, who were radio stars already, took another step upward and became movie stars as well. None of us will ever forget the making of that picture, "The Country Doctor." My diary entry for Dec. 5 remarks:

"Production started—what a lot of work! Noses sprayed—gowns—masks—'Quiet, please'—orders to 'troupe very faithfully carried out. The babes like it. Yvonne and Emilie were especially cute."

"Dec. 6. The babes are having a good time. Sleep well. They enjoy Jean Hersholt and Dorothy Peterson."

Lots of funny things happened during the filming. Marie took a liking to Cameraman Clark, and used to crawl out of camera range to go over and see him. Cecile repeatedly tried to take Jean Hersholt's glasses off. The youngsters made fine actresses; as a matter of fact, the real actors and actresses were a lot more nervous than the babes were."

NEXT WEEK: The quins emerge from babyhood and become children.

Here Comes the June Bride

ELEGANT

By Mrs. Penrose Lyly

THIS YEAR brides will vie with each other in trying to achieve delicacy, even Victorian "ladylikeness," in their gowns. And it's been rumored that the young grooms are going to like it very much.

One of the loveliest of these very feminine gowns is shown at left. It is fashioned after a costume seen in the paintings of James Jacque Tissot, a French painter who was extremely popular in England during Queen Victoria's reign. Those were the days when ladies strove to be very fragile and very frou-frou.

And this frou-frou bride with her page and flower girl catches all the spirit of that era and brings it to today's altar. She wears white tulle embroidered with silver swags, gathered in front and back, swooping up into a bustle bow at the back and trailing into a circular peacock train.

Ruffles edge her three-quarter tightly draped sleeves and neck, and on her breast are posed tiny orange blossom nosegays backed with silver leaves. Her Tissot veil flows about her from a tiny coronet of orange blossoms.

The little boy who carries her ring on its satin cushion wears a white satin suit edged with lace, and the little flower girl under her old-fashioned scooped poke bonnet wears a dress of white mousseline de soie.

But all brides will not be old-fashioned. Note the one in the smaller photograph. She wears a bewitching turban designed by Jean King for her going-away costume and on her black patent leather bag she sports her new name in initials. And it is rumored there will be many modern young grooms who will like this type of bride quite well, too. So June is going to make a lot of young people happy.

THIS SPRING brings a lingerie touch. The white neckwear sketched here was inspired by that horde of butterflies recently loosed by Schiaparelli—butterflies for the hair, butterflies poised on filmy evening gowns and even on hats.

These neck bows of organdie with lace, linen with Irish crochet, plique with rolled edges, plain folded linen, or more elaborate with several kinds of lace bound together, are endless in their crisp variety.

At the spring openings in Paris, France-vement showed blouses for suits trimmed with flounces of val or English eyelace. Other lingerie notes were tiny white lace ruffles at neck, cuffs and skirt hems on dark afternoon dresses, white lingerie chemisettes on street dresses and one very tailored faille silk suit had a frothy organdie and lace cravat.

Still another lovely lingerie note this spring is the snow-white bolero sketched here. Rows and rows of rick-rack braid on a linen backing produce this crisp jacket for wear over black or dark blue wool street dresses.

Light Desserts for June Days

WARM days in June can be made more comfortable if dessert is light, seasonal and lovely to look at. These recipes will help you achieve that agreeable result, and are practically certain to win your family's applause.

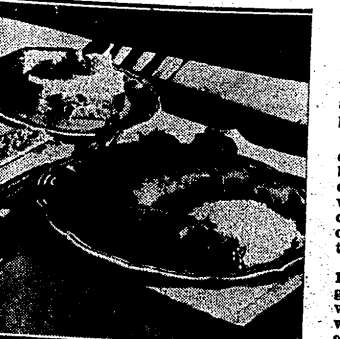

Strawberry Charlotte—4 to 6 servings. One tablespoon plain gelatin, ¼ cup cold water, ½ cup boiling water, 1 cup fresh strawberry puree, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ½ cup sugar, 2 egg whites, ½ cup cream, lady fingers.

Combine gelatin and cold water; when soft, add the boiling water. Then add strawberry puree made by rubbing berries through a sieve. Add sugar and lemon juice and stir for a few minutes. Cool, and when it begins to thicken, fold in stiffly beaten egg whites and whipped cream. Line mold with split lady fingers. Turn in the gelatin mixture. Chill in the refrigerator. Serve with extra whipped cream.

Fresh Pineapple Whip—4 to 6 servings. Three cups shredded fresh pineapple, ½ cup sugar, 1 cup water, ¼ cup quick-cooking tapioca, pinch salt.

Shred or chop pineapple very fine. Add sugar and stand half an hour. Then turn into saucepan, add water and bring to boiling point. Add tapioca and salt, and cook over water for 20 minutes until tapioca is clear. Stir frequently. Chill. Serve with heavy cream.

For a June breakfast—pineapple and grapefruit juice, then a dish of fresh strawberries and pineapple gems with powdered sugar. Follow with bacon, whole-wheat toast and coffee.

Small Cottages Can Be Furnished to Look Roomy and Attractive

WHEN A GROUP of decorators with national reputation select the color scheme for a little house that costs only $3000, their ideas are worth noting. Nancy McClelland, noted American decorator, was chairman of the committee appointed by the recent Annual Woman's National Exposition of Arts and Industries to decorate one of the Federal Housing Administration's low-cost four-room houses.

"We selected only what was both charming and practical, combining good taste with little expense," she explains. "Space-saving as well as money-saving had to be kept in mind for so small a house.

"In the living room we put a kind of couch which can be made into a double bed when grandmother or grandfather comes to spend the night. In this room we used also a table which looks like an ordinary table but which can be pulled out in extension so that for holiday feasts there will be more room.

"The size of this living room is only 13½x13½ feet. We used a smart burgundy carpet, the curtains are beetroot with narrow strips of silver metal in the weave, the walls dusty pink with a little green.

"The bedroom for mother and father has a three-quarter bed. We made a slip cover for the bed, something never done before. The family may have an old brass bed to use, but in order to bring it into harmony with the modern feeling of the house, the slip cover comes to the rescue. It can be taken off and laundered, of course.

"THIS ROOM is 10 feet by 11 feet 9 inches." The wall paper is pale pink, almost the same tone as the living room, with white in it. The bedspread and window curtains are made of white pique, the slip cover of pink and white chintz. A chest, a chair and a stool find place without appearing to crowd. The carpet is in a harmonious burgundy and does not clash with that in the living-room.

Miss McClelland explains that the boys' room needed the feeling of vigor and gaiety, so the carpet is bright red. The committee made the walls a beige-gray, the curtains blue chintz with white design of ships.

"It has a double-decker bed affair," she adds, "just like upper and lower steamship bunks. The boys will love it. The bed affair is made of driftwood."

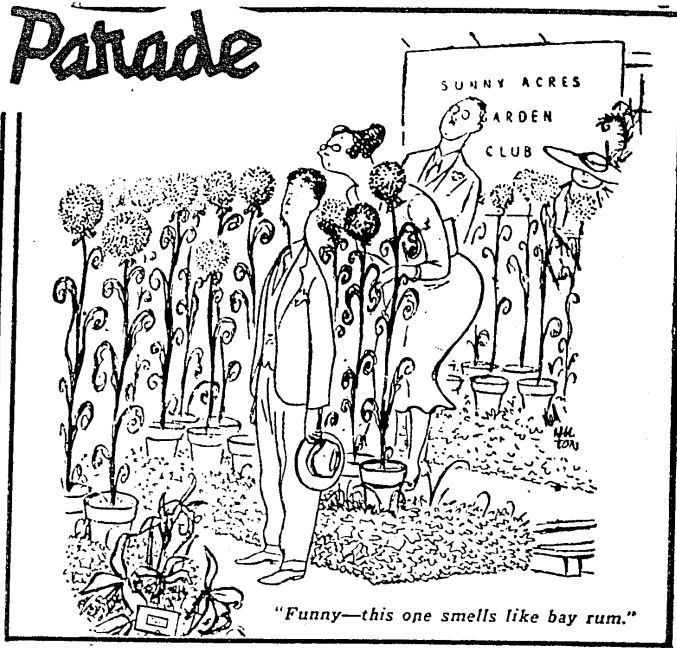

The small kitchen gets a large treatment. "A dish-towel paper in grayish white check, oil silk material window curtains in red and black, stove, cabinet, and refrigerator in pale beige-gray, linoleum in dark gray with lipstick red border, table and chair black—that's our answer to the question of a pleasant and useful kitchen," she explains.

Humor Parade

"What makes you think I'm going to the movies?
I'm waiting here for my wife."

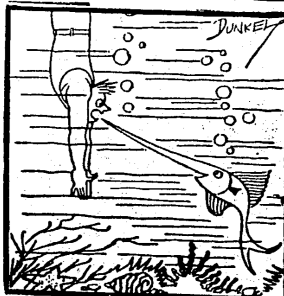

"Funny—this one smells like bay rum."

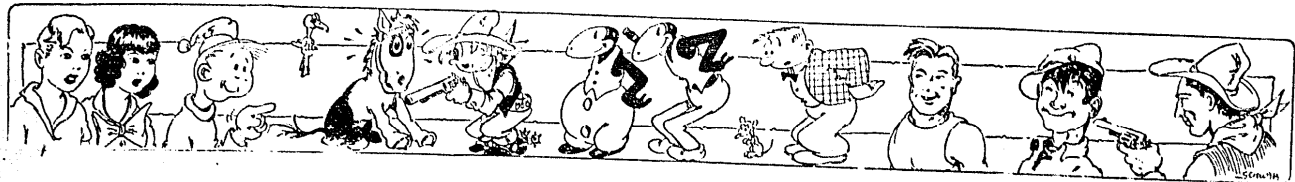

"Remember, folks, if on opening this surprise package you can honestly say you haven't gotten a surprise, I'll gladly return your money."

"My wife dropped in today and insisted on re-arranging the furniture!"

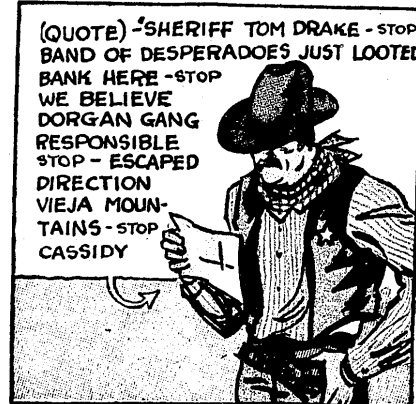

"Don't shake so loud—the Howards will be coming over!"
