Water Department Earnings Reviewed By City Manager

P. H. Beauvais Cites Comparative Figures To Show Value Of Change From Flat Rate To Metered Service In Rotary Club Talk Monday

Comparative figures showing the earnings of the water department under a metered system and under the old flat rate, were contained in a report on the industrial and commercial services of the water department presented to the Rotary club at their luncheon meeting Monday noon by P. H. Beauvais, city manager.

In February, 1936, Mr. Beauvais compiled and submitted to the council a report covering the operation of the local water works plant based on studies made by him. This report also contained a recommendation that the services supplied by the city should be put on a costed basis, a recommendation followed by the council in April of last year.

WATER RATE LOWERED BY CITY COUNCIL

Reduced Rate For Ensuing Year Effective As Of August 1 Billing

Council Overrides City Manager's Recommendation To Vote Reduction

Manistique's city council, at a postponed meeting Tuesday evening, overrode the city manager's recommendation that present water rates should not be tampered with for another year, and adopted a low-water rate, with a consumption of 7000 gallons of water per period, at 30 cents per gallon. The minimum charge will thus be $2.10 plus 50 cents meter rental or service charge, or $2.60 as compared with the present rate of $3.17 per period. Under this rate the minimum annual charge will be $7.80 as compared to $9.50 for the former charge.

Various Business Matters Reviewed; Vote Amended Dog Ordinance

Various business matters were reviewed by the city council Tuesday evening, and legislative action taken on most of the proposals. No action followed on the request of Alex Walker, labor leader, that the council reconsider its refusal to establish a 50 cent per hour minimum wage scale for city employees, however, or the city manager's suggestion that a bicycle ordinance be passed by the council.

A dog ordinance, to become effective about July 12, gives local police authority to lock dogs in their pound when they are found running loose. The dogs will be kept in the pound for 48 hours, and if they are not reclaimed by their owners in that time will be killed.

The terms of the ordinance will be effected from April 1 to September 30, instead of the year, as originally specified. An amendment to the ordinance provides for a reduction in the pound charge from $1.50 to $1.00.

A motion was made and passed that the price of the city's bank stock be fixed at $25 per share, following an offer of $15 per share.

Facts Sought About Coast Guard Station

Send Telegram To Representative Luecke Regarding Appropriation

City officials Thursday awaited an answer to a telegram sent to Representative John Luecke in Washington asking for definite information regarding a possible federal appropriation for the construction of a coast guard station in Manistique. According to received here, the bill, recently passed by the United States Senate and House of Representatives, did not provide for funds to erect the station.

The origin of the bill, introduced by Representative Luecke, the bill did provide for the necessary appropriation, but this provision was stricken from the bill by the measure, as finally passed and signed by the President, merely authorizes the construction of the coast guard station here, at such time as the coast guard commandant sees fit. It is believed that the funds must come directly from the coast guard service, and not from the treasury of the United States, as first understood.

Complete Water And Sewer Project

The North Front street water and sewer project was to be completed Thursday evening, it was announced late this afternoon by P. H. Beauvais, city manager. The project started June 1.

The Oak street division of a similar project, which also includes work on Arbutus avenue, will be finished this week, probably Friday, Mr. Beauvais said.

Local Merchants Offer Bargains For Holiday

In this issue of The Manistiquie Pioneer-Tribune the business men of Manistique are inviting local residents and citizens of surrounding communities to attend the big Fourth celebration here Monday.

Huge Pyrotechnic Exhibition Will Climax Fourth Celebration

Final plans for the city's holiday celebration, to be staged Monday, July 5, were completed this week by the committees in charge of the event, which it is said, will be the biggest Fourth of July program ever held here.

Featuring the day of activity will be a mammoth parade, the most spectacular display of fireworks ever viewed in Manistique. The pyrotechnic exhibition, to be shown over Lake Michigan, will be doubly effective, that is, over the water.

According to present indications, the parade will be even larger than that of the one last year. Manistique business establishments and organizations are invited to enter parades, which will be judged by a special committee. The first prize is $10, and other prizes are proportionately high.

The sports program will open at 1 o'clock at the fairgrounds, and will include various races, both for boys and girls, balloon blowing contests, fat men's race, pie eating contests, pony races, fast and slow horse race, and a team wagon race. The baseball game between Manistique and Garder is the closing event of the afternoon activity.

In the evening the program will include greasy pigs, to be released at the corner of Deer and Third streets, a greasy pole, with a $10 prize for the winner, water fight on Arbutus avenue, and finally the band concert from the harbor and the huge fireworks exhibition.

More than $1400 has been appropriated to give Manistique residents and visitors from surrounding communities one of the most outstanding celebrations ever staged here.

Mr. Lydia Roos, Mrs. Gertrude Furey and daughters, Evelyn and Gertrude, have reopened the Roos home on Lake street for the summer. For the past year, Mrs. Roos and the Furey children have resided in White Plains, N. Y., where Mrs. Furey has a teaching position.

Leo Fox, of Muskegon, spent the week-end here with his wife and two children at the J. H. Van Dyck home.

Mr. Lewis Roos, Mrs. Gertrude Furey and daughters, Evelyn and Gertrude, have reopened the Roos home on Lake street for the summer. For the past year, Mrs. Roos and the Furey children have resided in White Plains, N. Y., where Mrs. Furey has a teaching position.

In this issue also will be found advertisements listing hundreds of splendid bargains in quality merchandise offered for sale during Friday and Saturday, the two days preceding the Fourth.

Back in 1928, Lewis attacked three men in print for trying to install through which they can be supplied.

IMPORTANT CHANGES IN AUTO TAG LAWS

Legislature Passes Bill To Make March 1st Annual Deadline

Passage by the legislature of the bill to make March 1 the annual deadline for the purchase of automobile license plates and stickers, with neither the secretary of state nor any other official authorized to extend this deadline, is expected to be a step in advance. The present law permits the secretary of state to extend the final expiration date to March 1. In addition to the secretary's desire to call public attention to these two important changes in the motor vehicle law, the secretary of state gave points to the fee of 25c to be collected hereafter for the issuance of stickers or half-year permits. This fee will cover the extra cost of issuing half-year permits. The change by the state of this small fee appears to be fair and proper, considering the accommodation represented by a half year installment plan for the purchase of a set of plates. The bookkeeping, special costs represented by the printing and handling of the same half million stickers annually is an item which no one should long expect the state to absorb. The collection of the 25c fee will bring in approximately $125,000 annually, it is estimated.

JOHN FREEMAN, 71, CLAIMED BY DEATH

Resident Of Hiawatha Township For 50 Years Dies At Home Friday

John Freeman, 71, Hiawatha township farmer, and a resident of that community for more than 50 years, succumbed to a long illness Friday afternoon at a long illness at home. A stroke was given as the cause of death. He was born in Galesburg, Sweden on March 2, 1865, and came to the United States in 1886, settling in Hiawatha township. Survivors include his widow, three sons, Paul, of Jamestown, N. Y.; Elmer and Victor, of Manisquarter, four daughters, Mrs. Marie E. Celasquie, Mrs. Clara Lanning, of Jamestown, N. Y.; Mrs. Adena Beardslee, of Berwyn, Ill.; and Mrs. Axel Holmquist, of Iron River. There are also ten grandchildren.

Funeral services were held from the Gunnarson and Refauser parlors at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon when she was buried in Fairview cemetery.

Seney News

STATE LIBRARY HAS AUDUBON VOLUMES

Collection Includes Books Containing Colored Plates From Original Sketches

Among the most highly prized volumes in the Michigan State Library collection are some of the works of John James Audubon, one of the most famous of all American naturalists.

A general revival of interest in the works of Audubon has been attributed to the recent publication of several books on the life of the great naturalist, particularly the biography by Constance C. C. C. which has been acclaimed by critics as one of the outstanding works of the year.

The Audubon volumes at the library are valued at several hundred dollars and are kept in the vault. The treasured books may be inspected and used for reference work but under no conditions can they be taken from the library.

The Audubon collection includes the Elephant Folio of North America quadrupeds, three volumes in one, containing 150 colored plates made from the original Audubon sketches from nature. It is supplemented by three volumes of text, describing the pictures. They were published during the years of 1845-1858.

In addition the library possesses a complete set of seven volumes, quarto size, published in 1840-1844, dealing with the birds of America. These books contain colored plates from the original Audubon sketches and explanatory text.

Basketball Tops High School Sports

Basketball is the most popular sport among the 700 high schools belonging to the Michigan High School Athletic Association it was revealed in Lansing this week by Charles E. Forsythe, director of interscholastic athletics for the state.

Basketball was played in 650 schools during the year. Baseball ranked second in popularity, with 400 schools participating in what is known as the national game. Football was played in 325 schools, 225 had track teams, 175 sponsored tennis teams, 125 golf, 40 cross country, 30 swimming and 20 went in for hockey.

Manistique High school took part in basketball, football track and golf activities this year.

Luecke Asks Investigation of Great Lakes Fishing Industry

Congressman John Luecke introduced a Resolution last week calling for an investigation of the fishing industry on the Great Lakes. This action was taken as the result of a study which revealed some startling figures on fish production in recent years compared to previous years.

In a speech on the floor of the House, Luecke stressed the alarming decline in production of fish in the Great Lakes area during the past decade, citing figures to show the extinction, actual or threatened, of the blackfin, bloater, salmon, sturgeon, chub and Lake Erie cisco, as well as several additional species of chubs. He pointed out that Yellow perch has declined 50% in Lake Michigan and 75% in Lake Huron; that the Lake Superior bluefish is gone; and that the Lake Michigan blackfin and Lake Ontario bloater have all but disappeared. Statistics were presented showing that in 1924 Lake Erie produced 21,250,000 pounds of cisco whereas by 1924 the catch had dwindled to 111,000 pounds.

With the advent of the deep-sea trap production of whitefish in Michigan waters rose to 8,155,338 pounds in 1931, and then dropped sharply until in 1932 the catch was but 2,516,826 pounds, despite the use of twice as many traps in the latter year.

Luecke then quoted from the fishing laws of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Indiana, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, and Ontario, showing the multiplicity of conflicting regulations regarding the

WASHINGTON COMMENT

By Congressman John Luecke 11th Michigan District
Judicial Reform—The House considered this week the Sumner Bill, creating a new method for trying Federal district judges charged with misbehavior in office. The bill was introduced by Chairman Sumners of the House Judiciary Committee, to speed up the handling of the cases instead of through more cumbersome Congressional impeachment proceedings. The bill would provide that charges of misbehavior would be referred by Congress to the Chief Justice of the United States, who would name a three-man court of Federal Circuit Court of Appeals size of nets, mesh and duration of open seasons. Emphasizing the national character of the Great Lakes, the speaker pointed out that this area is the greatest source of fresh water fish for the nation and that it provides recreational facilities for millions of people from outside states.

Referring to the alarming situation which confronts an industry employing 10,000 men, over 5,000 boats and having a capital investment of many millions, Luecke pleaded for conservation of commercial fish before it becomes too late. In conclusion, Luecke stated it was his conviction that uniform laws and federal guidance in working out conservation policies must be undertaken if commercial fishing in the Great Lakes area is to be saved.

Representative Luecke's resolution authorizes an investigation of the fisheries and fishing industries of the Great Lakes by the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, with the view of determining the condition and prospects of such fisheries and their relation to the national food supply, and the most appropriate methods of answering and promoting such industry in the public interest. The resolution empowers the Bureau of Fisheries to cooperate with and utilize the services of agencies of states bordering on the Great Lakes, and directs that periodical reports on the results of the investigation be furnished to the Congress, together with recommendations for revising or with recommendations for revising the existing legislation.

Judges to try them. The three-man court would be empowered only to remove the judge from office. Preceding an "interesting" fight over the measure, Speaker William B. Bankhead said: "The bill strikes deeply at judicial reform." Green and Lewis—Recently your Congressman wrote an open letter to President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, urging reconciliation between the two groups and a cessation of lawless activities in connection with recent strikes. Excerpts from this letter follow: "During the past year or two labor has gone about with hands and bounds, and that in spite of the fact that a rift in the leadership has occurred. Obviously, that being true it only makes it very clear to me that the time has come for labor to dig in and check, to stand its ground, to be ready to be done. That is to be expected. And so far as I am concerned I am not at all alarmed. It couldn't be otherwise.

"Labor has come through some trying years since the depression. And during its darkest days labor did not lose its head. In spite of the fact that millions walked the streets, labor took it on the chin, gaunt and naked and without a cent. And that is why I am writing you this letter.

"I am appealing to you to give this phase of the present day situation your earnest and serious consideration. Labor can not afford to lose the support of the public. We must have their sympathies. But if such things are going to become common (as outlined above) labor is going to be successful for but a day. That is what I am afraid of. "I don't like to make any predictions or prophesy, but I venture to say that when the various State Legislatures meet again Bills are going to be introduced which will leave labor tied hand and foot. And that sort of legislation is going to pass. It is going to become law, and labor leaders of today, make the growing, growing, man-month child of organization by the hand and lead it in such a way that it shall maintain the sympathy and respect of the public. Every great movement must have the sympathy of the public to be successful and continue in its success. "Labor can only progress when it is free. That is a natural law which can be applied to almost anything. It must have the space in which to expand. It must not be cramped. It must have the right to strike and to assert itself when conditions are such that life is not worthwhile. "If the time should ever come when labor can not assert itself then our democracy shall have come to an end. For only in a democracy can that be possible. That is our history. And there are things which we must think about and to which we must give consideration. "I know that one can not ask for a crust of bread with tongue in Herbert and Mrs. Gordon Higgins will be hostesses. Reservations are to be made before 4 o'clock Monday afternoon by calling the hotel or either of the hostesses.

Mitsummer Festival
 Featured by a program of special talks and musical numbers, the annual mitsummer festival of the Zion Lutheran church was presented at the church Wednesday evening, of last week, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society. The following numbers were presented: Organ solo, Mrs. Harry Ahlstrom; Talk of Mit-Summer, Harold Peterson; Song, James Mooney; accordion solo, Florence Williams; trio in Swedish, Mrs. Scott Greighton, Marie Ahlstrom, Edith Storr, Mrs. H. Ahlstrom, accompanist; piano solo, Dorothy Peterson; cornet solo, Dorothy Curran; guitar and songs, Violet and Lilly Ann. Refreshments were served following the program.

Church Decorations were flowers and leaves.
 Anniversary Party
 Mr. and Mrs. Lewis LaBombard, of Flint, who celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary silver wedding supper at the home of Mrs. LaBombard's brother and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Maultsbaug Sunday evening. Mr. and Mrs. LaBombard were married in St. Francis de Sales church here, but for the past several years have resided in Flint, where Mr. LaBombard is a mail carrier. Six of their seven children were present at the anniversary party.

QUESTIONS THAT ARE ASKED ABOUT BANKING

"Can I make deposits in your Bank by mail?"

YES, if you are a depositor of this bank you can send, at any time, checks or money orders for deposit in your account. Entries will be made in your person and we will mail a notice that your deposit has been received. Checks or money orders for deposit should be properly endorsed with your signature. Currency should be sent by registered mail. Banking by mail is a service developed for our depositors to be used when it is inconvenient for them to come to the bank in person. However, we like the personal contact with our customers and prefer to see them whenever possible, rather than transact their business through the mails. We invite you to use this convenience of banking by mail.

Manistique In Former Days

Fifty Years Ago

Charles R. Orr arrived here Friday from Ann Arbor in a short time, having been in the city for some time. Dr. Hubbard's school at Manistique closed on Friday and he is on his way to his home in Ann Arbor.

The strawberry season in this locality is being started now, the late and early crops, than any that have been known in this part of the state.

The steam large boat arrived at Thompson Sunday in the morning, making the first trip and unloading in just five days. Pretty quick time.

The new plating mill is being enclosed—it will be a mammoth establishment when completed. We also hope that they will never be as cheap again as now.

The new sidewalk on Lake street has been completed, thus affording another good outlet for travel.

One week from next Tuesday the grand lodge of Good Templars meets at Resolute. The lodge at this point has elected three delegates to attend the session.

Underwiski offers to play the piano at musicales for $5,000 per year. We have an idea that Mrs. Owen or Miss Kennedy will be willing to play the same length of time for $5,000. Having heard all parties mentioned in this item we have no hesitation in stating our preference for the cheaper one and performance.

Thirty Years Ago
Mrs. George, of St. Johns, Mich., was married at the residence of Mrs. Aveline Taylor by the Rev. J. C. Roney officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were at home to their friends at their residence, Garden avenue, on and after July 1.

Dustless Roads attract town trade

Clean, dustless roads give a town that attractive air that urges people to come and trade. And the dollars these customers leave behind benefit the entire community. Keeping roads dustless is easy and economical with DOWFLAKE Calcium Chloride. Spread upon or made part of gravel roads it attracts and holds sufficient moisture to overcome dust. Back up your highway officials in their dust control programs—for you will not only get clean, safe roads but reduce the cost of maintenance as well.

Isabella Man Fined For Carrying Gun

Isabella, Mich.—John Larson, of Isabella, was fined $25, his gun confiscated, and put on a year's parole, Monday, by Justice of the Peace, William McClintchey, after a complaint was brought in by Constable John T. Allen, Tuesday, of Isabella.
Mr. Larson was arrested last Monday after he was caught carrying a gun in a game area.

the following dispatch from the Moscow bureau:

"The CIO strike activities in the United States are described as a militant Labor movement which the American Communist Party is energetically supporting, in a long article by Maurice J. O'Leary, New York correspondent for Pravda, just published in that newspaper. Mr. O'Leary states that the success of that movement is of great political significance. He said that large numbers of workers are being organized for the first time and that the proletariat is resorting to strikes as part of the class struggle."

"The Communist Party is taking a very active part in the work of uniting the workers of the basic branches of industry," wrote Pravda's correspondent. "He is helping to prepare direct mass strikes. It is energetically struggling against the disintegrating policy of labor union bureaucracy and for the unification of labor unions into a single powerful organization on the basis of the committee's program."

Concluding the article on Communist activity in the CIO, the American Mercury article declares: "But the fact remains that the present state of consciousness in America, if sufficiently prolonged and aggravated, will constitute the death of genuine Liberalism, the fulfillment of Communist prophecy, and an excuse for the accession of one type or another of Authoritarian State."

"In 1935 the water department showed a deficit of $2,322.52 and had we continued this operation on a flat rate basis, the estimated deficit for the last fiscal year would have been $3,220.62," the speaker asserted. "The audit for the last fiscal year shows a net income of $868.45," he said.
"Experience to date has convinced me that the council should wisely when they changed from flat rates to metered services and many of the consumers who were so emphatically opposed to this practice have now been converted to the idea that it was the proper thing to do," he concluded.

Announce Week's Film Features

George Brent co-stars with Josephine Hutchinson in Saturday's screen feature at the Gero theatre, "Mountain Justice," a severe indictment of the backwardness of certain parts of the civilized United States.

Weaving ballet and ballroom dancing into its hilarious and romantic plot, "Shall We Dance," which comes to the local theatre Sunday, is said to be the most original of all the Astaire-Rogers pictures. Edward Everett Horton and Eric Blore are in prominent roles.

Hein Mack, dark eyed star, is co-featured with Onslow Stevens, in "You Can't Buy Luck," which is Monday's film feature. The story is a race-track drama climaxing in a murder mystery.

Patsy Kelly and Lydia Roberts are introduced as a starring team in "Nobody's Baby," feature comedy to be shown here Tuesday. Lynne Overman and Robert Armstrong are also in the cast.

Billy and Bobby March, 12-year-old twins play the title roles of Mark Twain's story, "The Prince and the Pauper," to be shown here Wednesday. Errol Flynn is co-starring with them as Miles Hendon, the swash-buckling soldier of fortune.

The Cowboy GETS Speedy as an Aid to CUPID

By Oren Arnold

ARE you male, tall and firm-chinned? Are your eyes dark? Your skin tanned? Your hands strong but gentle, and likewise your voice?

In short, are you handsome? If so, there may be a chance for you and cupid and the bank cashier to form a partnership "out West" this season.

If you are slightly bowlegged, that will help make you convincing. It wouldn't be held against you if you could even ride a horse.

No kidding, the dude ranch owners of the West met in convention at Denver recently, and seriously adopted a 1937 program of moonlight-and-crooning.

Cowboys are being hired not because they can brand a bellowing steer, remove screw worms from a heifer, or build a barbed wire fence, but solely because they are good looking.

Gary Cooper could land a job if he wanted it; he's the type. Or Jack Holt, Or John Boles. The dude ranch owners know what they are doing now. For a long time they fancied that eastern folk wanted the "real" West, with its real rough and often uncouth business of cow punching. Not so. The paying dudes want romance.

"The unasked question of school teachers, debutantes, Junior League—even heiresses—is, 'What chance for romance?'" said Lee Hermann of Colorado Springs, Colo., secretary of the dude ranch association which met in Denver. He was summing up the last decade's experiences before the assembled ranch owners and managers.

"Potential women customers must be told, off-hand like, that your ranch is full of handsome, cowboys just pining for girls. And you can see that it is true by hiring men for their love-making ability. The men who actually do the dirty work on the ranch need not be publicized, and should be kept in the background."

IT'S going to be a big year for that old buckaroo, Dan'l Cupid, out on the ranges where the deer and the antelope play! The prospecting for male partners has been exceptionally good in the last year or two, dude ranchers reported.

"If we had charged a match-making fee of even 1 per cent of the women's wealth," suggested one association official, "we would all be out of debt. Dude ranches attract a generous assortment of rich women, and our ranch hands sure do fall hard. We haven't had enough cowboys for them."

Anne Gould-Meador, famous railroad heiress, "went Western" not long ago in Wyoming. Herman Elsbury, young cowboy from Cody, happened to have an impressionable heart and so—"zing!"—an arrow pierced it. Fifty years ago it would have been an Indian arrow. But times have changed. Heiresses seem to have replaced the Indians now.

Alec Broadwell, $60-a-month ranch hand and guide on a dude outfit in southern Arizona, was assigned to Miss Ernestine Crowell from Philadelphia as horse wrangler and question answerer. Miss Crowell, it is said, is worth upward of half a million, and is plenty beautiful. But she isn't Miss Crowell any more; she is Mrs. Broadwell.

No, she didn't take Alec back to Philadelphia and exhibit him in a dress suit and silk hat. She bought a ranch in Mexico and makes Alec run it—which is "going Western" in earnest!

The reverse method of mate hunting won't work so well on dude ranches. That is, the city man need not come West expecting or hoping to find some rancher's daughter whose father is just about to die and leave her 10,000 wealthy acres.

THE ideal cowgirl is exquisitely beautiful—shapely and pink with Nature's rouge, healthy and athletic, peppery and cute and efficient and altogether charming.

She can ride with the best of 'em, by George, and shoot her pistol like a soldier. She can twirl a lariat rope or his drop it on a wild bull's left foot or his horns at will. She can boss 50 hard-headed cowboys, operating the ranch so as to make it pay. She can dance every old-time dance and every modern one, cook the way mother used to, and play a mean game of polo.

The only catch is—she doesn't exist! You can see her in the movies, and nowhere else. There may have been half a dozen of her since time began, but no more.

The former Anne Gould, railroad heiress, and her cowboy husband, Herman Elsbury of Cody, Wyo.

She may appear on the dude ranch personnel—hired for her looks and her sociability—but you can bet six-bits some big-hatted fellow ups and marries her within three months. If she really is a rancher's daughter she hops off to the city as soon as she gets old enough.

All in all, however, there is a balance of boys and gals on the dude ranches, because more dude ladies than men come to the West.

They have plenty of fun. In some districts, they have a rodeo every Saturday and Sunday. The cowboys and the dudes all take part, if they wish. Arizona, for instance, has never forgotten how Count James Minotto, son of an Italian nobleman and of a famous German actress, came to a dude ranch one season and climbed up onto the corral fence at a local rodeo. He was watching the bucking horse.

"Wanta ride, dude?" yelled one hardened old cowpoke.

The count bowed politely.

The range folk all grinned. Here was a dumb tenderfoot about to get trimmed down. They gave him a tough horse. The count had to be told what to do, but in due course he was up on the animal's main deck. "Whoopee-é-é-é!" shouted the cowboys as they turned the wild beast loose.

THE horse gave one buck, and the count landed back on its quarter deck.

The crowd roared. They watched the count rise, expecting him to slink away. But—he came back for more! He amazed the cowboys by demanding another trial, then another.

When he had proved he was no softer they made him stop, and later taught him the western tricks from the kindergarten up. After that day, if anybody intimated around the corral that Count James was a sissy, he'd get a sock in the nose from some western fist. Moreover, he wasn't Count James any more. He was plain Jimmy.

He is plain Jimmy Minotto to this day. He is a rancher himself in Arizona now, owns a fine herd of cows has been state senator there, and almost became elected governor. So, if a dude has the right stuff in him, he will be taken to the hearts of western folk. Quite incidentally—but in line with the 1937 program of the dude ranch owners—an eastern dudette fell for this handsome "cowboy" and married him. She was Ida Mae Swift, daughter of the famous packer.

A lot of boy and girl dudes just loaf around in the sun. In late years the ranches have developed a process of branding their dudes with heat—but without branding irons.

The Triangle Bar ranch, for instance, burns its brand on cow calves with a red-hot iron, but on lady calves with sunshine. No trick to it—just stick the brand, cut from adhesive tape, onto your bare leg, expose it to western sunshine for three or four days, remove it and you belong to the branded herd.

PETROLEUM SCIENTISTS

Lessening Drain on Nation's

OIL RESERVE

TO THE RESEARCH SCIENTIST working indefatigably in his laboratory, is due a major share of the credit for the progress that is steadily being made in conserving our crude petroleum resources. Through the advances science is making in the refining of crude petroleum and its extraction from the ground, the day when the nation's oil supply will be exhausted is constantly being postponed.

Conservation does not only mean, as many assume, the preservation, the stoppage of use, or the hoarding of the resource. It is true that petroleum, like other natural resources—our coal, our iron, our copper—is irreplaceable. Nature will not refill with oil the sands that have been drained. But it is also true that the nation's prosperity, Thermal polymerization plant being built by The Atlantic Refining Company at its Point Breeze Refinery, Philadelphia, to produce gasoline from refinery gases. With a daily capacity of 62,500 gallons of gasoline, the plant will be the largest of its type in the world, and the first to be built in the eastern United States.

CORE DRILLS WERE DEvised THAT PROBEd THE SUBTERRANEAN SANDS AND BROUGHT UP SPECIMENS TO BE ANALYSED IN THE LABORATORY security and comfort necessitate the wide use of products derived from crude petroleum. With this in mind, conservation must be taken to mean that our oil resources must be drawn upon, refined and used without waste, in orderly response to economic requirements.

MOTOR FUEL FROM WASTE GASES

Polymerization, a staggering word to the layman, is the term used to describe the latest triumph of science in the elimination of waste during the refining process. Briefly, polymerization involves the production of high-grade gasoline from refinery gases hitherto wasted or used as fuel. Marking recognition of the importance of this new process, The Atlantic Refining Company has built a new refinery at Atraco, Texas, which includes a polymerization unit, while at its Point Breeze refinery, Philadelphia, it is erecting what will be the largest thermal polymerization plant in the world. From gases generated during the refining of crude petroleum, the Point Breeze plant will produce 62,500 gallons of gasoline daily. In other words the process will make possible to produce every day 62,500 more gallons of gasoline than it would otherwise be possible to produce from the amount of crude run through the refinery.

Gasoline produced from refinery gases by polymerization is particularly well adapted to use in modern high-compression engines according to The Atlantic Refining Company's engineers, who point out that the possibilities of the process in relation to future motor fuel production are truly startling. If polymerization were adopted generally by the petroleum refining industry it is estimated that it would increase by over 1,000,000,000 gallons the amount of gasoline now being obtained from the crude petroleum refined annually by the industry. This additional 1,000,000,000 gallons would supply the annual requirements of some 2,000,000 motorists without imposing any additional drain on the nation's oil reserve.

"CRACKED" GASOLINE

Polymerization is still in its infancy but the cracking process, another triumph of the research scientist, has already been in general use long enough to demonstrate both its potentialities and its results. About 25 years ago, although the fullest possible yield from straight-run refining had been secured, the demand for gasoline began to mount rapidly, due to the increasing use of the automobile. In producing gasoline by straight-run refining, no change in chemical composition is involved. The constituent products are simply separated out of the crude oil. "Cracked" gasoline is obtained by taking the heavier constituents of crude oil obtained along with gasoline in straight-run refining, and subjecting them to high temperatures in specially designed stills.

What "cracking" does is to break up or crack the heavy constituents of crude oil into oils that boil over a wide range from very low to very high. The gasoline, or the lighter and lower boiling material, is separated out by subjecting it to much the same refining process as the original straight-run refining.

Approximately 8,500,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum have been conserved in the United States in the last 17 years by using the cracking process in the manufacture of motor fuel. Had it not been for cracking it would have been necessary to run nearly 22,000,000,000 barrels of crude oil to stills between January 1, 1920, and December 31, 1936, to produce the more than 5,000,000,000 barrels of gasoline required. Use of the cracking process made it possible to produce this amount of motor fuel from a little over 13,000,000,000 barrels of crude. The amount of crude oil conserved by the cracking process represents nearly two-thirds of the currently estimated reserve. Cracking has undoubtedly been the greatest single contribution to the conservation of our petroleum supply.

REJUVENATION OF OLD POOLS

The third outstanding contribution to petroleum conservation that scientists have made lies in increasing the percentage of oil extracted from the nation's oil pools, and in producing a second crop of oil from pools previously considered exhausted. Under the ordinary flowing and pumping method of producing oil, a good part of the oil in the underground reservoir cannot be brought to the surface. The oil obstinately clings to the sands which hold it, defying the most powerful pump.

Petroleum scientists set themselves to the solution of the problem of how to recover this "irrecoverable" oil. The first necessity was to obtain specimens of the petroleum bearing sands, thousands of feet below the surface. Only when the structure of these sands was definitely known would it be possible to determine how they might be forced to release their store of oil. Core drills were devised that probed the subterranean sands and brought up specimens to be analysed in the laboratory. According to the results of the analysis, water, air or natural gas was introduced under pressure. Reservoirs long given up as exhausted began to produce oil again.

Nobody knows just how much petroleum that would otherwise have remained in the ground and forever unusable, has been recovered by such "secondary recovery" methods, but the Pennsylvania oil fields, the oldest in the world, provide a vivid example of what has been accomplished. For 78 years these Pennsylvania fields have been producing high-grade oil, but a quarter of a century ago the oil timers were predicting the certain exhaustion of the fields in another 25 or 30 years.

Today, thanks largely to "secondary recovery" methods, Pennsylvania has boosted its annual oil production to almost the 16,000,000-barrel mark.

Where it once cost $2.00 to lift a barrel of oil to the surface the job is now being done for around 35 cents. Millions of dollars are being spent for new machinery. The landscape is dotted with new drilling wells. One of the greatest upsurges of oil field activity during the last half century has grown out of the rejuvenation process born and bred in the science laboratory.

My DIARY of Three Years with the DIONNE QUINTUPLETS

by Nurse YVONNE LEROUX

Part V

AFTER the excitement of filming "The Country Doctor" was over, life in the quintuplets' nursery quickly resumed its normal routine.

With the movies out of the way, my diary reads:

"Dec. 16. The babes were inoculated (for diphtheria) today. They didn't mind it very much. The doctor hated to do it, I think.

"Dec. 18. Yvonne and Annette cut their fingers, but not seriously; put adhesive on them. Annette sucked hers off—and Yvonne is very proud of hers.

"Dec. 19. Yvonne and Emilie had a fight today. Annette and Emilie had a fight. Marie got into a fight and had her diaper pulled off.

"Dec. 21. They pulled the curtains and rods down today. Annette and Yvonne tried to tell me about the snow sliding down off the roof.

"Dec. 23. They had a grand time watching the Christmas tree go up. They are all so lovable and charming I could fill a book about them. . . . I've removed the curtains and rods."

I can't describe the babes' second Christmas. My brother died, and I went on leave of absence on Dec. 25. My diary resumes:

"Dec. 29. Babes recognized me and were glad to see me. Marie is very cross today. I guess she was spoiled.

"Jan. 2. Babes slept very well outdoors today. They have been rather restless. Have slight colds in the nose.

"Jan. 3. Yvonne blows her nose with great force. She reaches for the tissue and blows and blows—and then laughs at the stir she makes. They are getting to be scrappers—pull each other's hair and bite, and tease each other by offering toys and pulling them away. We have to separate them quite often, but they soon make up and play together again.

"Jan. 4. The babes have been climbing on radiators and falling or pushing each other off. We have finally managed to make them stop by taking them off each time and telling them that they're not to do this. They still fight. Marie delights in stealing toys, etc.

"Jan. 5. Went out of nursery for about five minutes; came back and nearly fainted—Yvonne was covered with blood. It was in her eyes, her hair, all over her clothes, all over the others who were standing around patting her on the back and getting some blood on their hands. She must have fallen on something and cut her forehead open about half an inch. There was no crying, though—just a pleasant time. I put iodine and a bandage on but it soon came off—everybody picked at it.

"Jan. 11. Marie can stand alone. She is afraid of walking and slides down as soon as someone tries to encourage her.

"Jan. 12. Doctors up from Toronto to X-ray the bone structure of the babes to determine just how well they are getting along. The plates show very good and strong bone formation.

"Jan. 13. Emilie tried to climb out of the bathtub and fell out. Marie refuses to eat coddled eggs—we have to scramble hers. Yvonne is trying to eat alone and gets it all over.

"Jan. 15. Marie ducks her head under water in the bath—and also gets her mouth even with the water and gurgles. She is taking a few steps.

"Jan. 17. Marie is walking much better.

"Jan. 21. The babes are doing their best to talk. They point for toys and things and jabber away in earnest."

A NEW landmark in the girls' growth was recorded in the entry for Feb. 18—"Morning sleep stopped; babes allowed to play all morning"; and Yvonne provided the entry for Feb. 22, as follows:

"Yvonne has started climbing—up on chairs, out of the play pen, and also out of bed. She goes around picking things up for her sisters, who stand in the play pen watching her in envy and excitement, and cheer her on to greater feats."

Further entries from the quins' second winter:

"Feb. 25. Marie, who can hardly stand straight, climbs on radiators and chairs. It's hard work, but she's cheerful about it—especially if she succeeds.

"March 1. It is a sight to see the babes 'out in the snow. They are so warmly dressed they look like humpty-dumpties. Their rubbers are forever coming off and then they all start to yell and point to their feet."

Another sick spell occurred in March, but it soon passed, and by March 10 I was writing of their attempts to clean the windows in imitation of the maid.

"March 11. Yvonne, who can get out of bed quite easily, runs around getting toys for her less fortunate sisters in bed. They throw them down just to see her pick them up. . . . The babes love to wash their hands in the basin and we always have a hard time getting them to stop.

"March 12. The babes brush their own teeth. It is rather a haphazard brushing at times, but they get the hang of it. . . . Emilie and Yvonne won't stay in bed. They both get out as fast as we put them back. When spied they run and hide under somebody's bed, and giggle.

"March 20. Marie is walking very well. Guess the crawl stage is over. She loves biting her sisters, and must be broken of that habit.

"March 27. This is the fifth night Emilie has been put back in bed. First night—51 times; second night, 46—and so on.

"April 1. Emilie put back in bed about 15 times tonight.

Photos and sketches world copyright, 1937, by NEA Service, Inc. "They are getting to be scrappers," Nurse Leroux wrote. "We often have to separate them."

"APRIL 2. Emilie started out of bed again tonight so I pinned the legs of her pajamas together, so she couldn't get over the edge of the bed. She fell asleep shortly afterward.

"April 3. Out in the snow for an hour today. They love walking around and occasionally sink through the crust; then everybody sympathizes with 'Ohhhhs' and 'Ahhhhs.'

"April 6. Emilie insists on waking at 5:30 every morning. She can't get out of bed so she lies there and talks to herself. It is so nice—to lie there in the dark and listen to her. It is like listening to the birds in early dawn.

"April 16. Yvonne, Annette and Cecile can say "Docteur." They know his car when it comes and flock over to the window, screeching, when it appears. . . . They love to see their mother and father coming over.

"May 6. Marie is playing much better. She doesn't need so much entertainment and direction of playing. She is also being more sociable—with the others, who are very sociable—that is they help each other out, give each other toys, smile at each other, etc.

"May 23. The babes kneel down of their own accord when a prayer lullaby is sung. It is really more of a squat, but they do very well, and try to cross their hands. They throw kisses at the picture of Jesus."

The quintuplets passed their second birthday without incident. Marie celebrated the occasion by saying "docteur" for the first time. We began the third summer of the girls' life without incident. A few typical diary entries:

"June 30. Cecile, Yvonne and Annette can wink. They bat their eyelashes and giggle.

"July 6. Marie combs her sisters' hair—with more force than effect. Emilie washes the floor—guess she has noticed the maids.

"July 17. The babes talk a lot among themselves. Annette has been talking the most. She might be the first to really talk.

"July 21. Marie fell today, and when her sisters went to pick her up she started to laugh. Every time they left her she would start pretending to cry, and they would run back to her. She found this so funny that she finally laughed so much she couldn't cry."

We had more movies that summer. Early in the fall I went on leave again. On my return the babes did seem so tall and sure of themselves. After that short absence I could see how independent they had grown. . . . they were slowly emerging from babyhood and becoming children.

LITTLE IMP

Sally Started on What Was to Be a Lark but Jumped Right Into the Arms of Romance

Illustrated by
KEMP STARRETT

By
FLORIA HOWE BRUESS

THE small sedan gasped and balked. Nan sat back and swore. "Darn, and a flock of darns. Stuck—a howling blizzard, a country road and night catching up with me. If it hadn't been for this darn detour—" Who would have thought that March sky was planning a blizzard, a last fling at Winter? Sleet had begun to fall when Nan had left New York, but what did a little sleet matter, when she was all set to drive to New Haven to spend the week-end with Dad and Mother?

The icy wind took a deep breath and raised its voice in a shriek.

"How nice you sing! Rehearsing my requiem while I freeze?"

She leaned forward, stared through the tall gaunt trees, rubbed her eyes, stared again and laughed as yellow glowworm lights sprang suddenly from out the darkening woods.

A house, and a big one! A country estate, no doubt. "Shine little glowworm—twinkle—for a little storm-tossed gal," she said gayly.

"Perhaps I can stay there overnight. I'll tell them who I am. A teacher of piano in Miss Parke's School for Girls, New York, is a character reference above question. The family silver will be safe."

She turned up her coat collar, pulled her hat low over her bright hair, stepped out of the car and shook her fist at it.

"Freeze to death for all I care," she cried gayly, dark-blue eyes sparkling, red lips laughing, for warmth, shelter lay ahead.

IT WAS a longer walk than Nan realized. When she neared the big porch, she was reeling, fighting for breath in that icy blast.

Evidently she had been seen, for the hall door opened and a young man sprang down the stairs, caught her as she reeled and slipped, lifted her like a child.

"Keep still. You're all in." He glanced down at the lovely elfin face that rested on his shoulder. Long thick lashes lay like a dark smudge on cheeks whipped rosy-red by the wind. His arms tightened around the little figure as he bent before the wind and hurried up the steps.

Then Nan found herself on her feet in a big mellow hall. Felt her hands grasped by a lovely woman with iron-gray hair. She heard a chatter of "My dear child, why didn't you take the train? Surely the weather was bad in New York when you left?"

Some one had whisked off Nan's hat.

"Miss Evans came just five minutes too soon," Nan said brightly. "I intended to tell you when breakfast was over."

She was conscious that Reed had made a startled movement, but she did not look at him. Her eyes were fixed on Mrs. Mason.

"You know you all took me for Sally, and I let it pass. I thought it would be such a lark. And it was."

Swift little ejaculations ran around the table.

"But—who are you?" Mrs. Mason asked quietly.

Silently Nan applauded. "Breeding. She doesn't flicker an eyelash."

"I am Nan Norton. I teach piano in Miss Parke's School for girls in New York. I was on my way to New Haven to spend the week-end with my parents. I got mixed up on a detour, found myself on a country road, then my engine died. It was growing dark, there wasn't a house anywhere near until I saw the lights from your house and—well, I couldn't sit in my car all night."

"Indeed you could not," Mrs. Mason said, and there was a twinkle in her eyes.

"Sal—I mean, Nan, you sure are an actress." Dick laughed.

Nan's eyes were guileless. "I didn't act. I was just myself."

"You sure put it over," some one chuckled and laughter like quicksilver ran around the table.

Nan listened to Reed's voice. But Reed was silent. She would not look at him.

Mrs. Mason rose. "Lay another plate," she told the impassive-faced butler and hurried to the hall.

"I think that's the cutest joke," Bess said laughingly.

THEY looked up expectantly as Mrs. Mason entered with a stunning-looking girl wrapped in fables, and a hot that said "Rue de la Paix."

After introductions were made, Nan rose. "I am leaving now. I packed my bag last night. And thank you for your lovely hospitality, Mrs. Mason."

"Can't you stay over, Nan? I would be glad to have you," the woman said warmly.

"Thanks so much. You're sweet. But my folks are expecting me."

She looked around the breakfast table. "Good-by, everybody. You're a grand bunch of girls and boys." She gave a smart little salute, and still did not look at Reed. Her eyes might betray her.

They called, "Good-by, Nan." But Reed was silent.

From the corner he hid a look of surprise. He didn't even say good-by. Hitting me. He's the only started shirt among all these boys. Every one else

Some one had whisked off Nan's wet hat. Her damp hair hung in little curls to her wet cheeks. And some other girl was slipping the steel-covered coat from the slim body.

"The storm has put our telephone out of commission, and I presume no motorcycle or car could get up from the village with your wire," the woman was saying.

Bewildered, Nan stared at the group surrounding her. She shook her head to clear it. She had heard of the heat making people crazy, but if the cold did, that was a new one.

"Well, you're here, anyway," the young man who had carried her in said lightly. "I'll send the footman out for your bags, and our chauffeur can tow your car to the garage and see what's wrong." The older woman turned to him. "Yes, Reed. Tell Sims to bring in Sally's bags." She turned again to Nan. "Are you thawing out now, child? You have been too chilled to talk. But don't try. Plenty of time to talk."

NAN glanced from face to face. There were about six men and six girls grouping around her. Was this a weekend house party and she an expected guest? But how strange that no one knew she was not "Sally."

No doubt the real Sally had decided not to come because of the blizzard. Well, why not be Sally tonight? What fun. A real adventure. And Reed—evidently the son of this house—was certainly something to make a girl sit up—Nan's dimples were beginning to fly. Her eyes sparkled and suddenly she laughed.

"You are all right now, Sally," one of the girls said.

"Yes, I'm warm as toast," Nan sparkled.

They all tramped through the big arch leading to the drawing room. Reed put his hand under Nan's elbow.

"I'm so glad you came, Sally. That sister of mine knows how to pick 'em." His voice was running over with admiration.

"If I'm a friend of your sister," Nan thought, "how come no one knows I'm not Sally? And where is his sister?"

Several couples had drifted to the fireplace with their tea cups. Reed pushed a chair to the tea table, brought Nan tea and a plate of delicate little sandwiches.

She heard one of the men say: "Mrs. Mason" as he addressed a remark to the older woman, and silently Nan took notes.

Mrs. Mason looked approvingly at Nan's sparkling, glowing little face. Such a beautiful girl, she thought. So happy a little thing, so smiling and gay. "I'm very glad you came, Sally, but I'm very sorry you had so unpleasant an experience."

"It wasn't so bad," Nan laughed and gave Reed a swift sidelong glance.

"We are all strangers to you, but I feel I know you, Sally, for Kay mentions you so often in her letters. It is so nice that you both attend the same art school at Paris," Mrs. Mason murmured.

"The light is dawning," Nan told herself. "This is fun. I'm glad my French is pretty good, but I hope no one asks me to do a sketch. I'd be sunk."

Reed was hovering by her side. She gave him a gamin little smile and an oblique look from her larkspur eyes. She heard lazy talk and laughter at the old fireplace where little flirtations were developing.

How lovely it all was. Such a beautiful home. Such friendly young people. And how grand Reed was. Tall, slim, good looking, with a mouth that loved to sulk.

"I wish Kay had come over with you," Mrs. Mason was saying, "but she insists on remaining six months more, as you, of course, know."

Nan, sipping her tea, was saved a reply.

They lounged around the big hearth, the voice of the fire mingling with the voice of the wind. Soft lamplight, glowing firelight, while outside the storm gods rode their steeds of sleet and wind.

After a time the dressing gong sent its musical notes through the big room, and one by one they rose and drifted upstairs. Bess slipped her arm through Nan's.

"You're fun, Sally," she said. "I'm so glad you came. We're going to have a good time. I love a blizzard, don't you? And this was so unexpected."

"I like blizzards, too," Nan laughed. "When I'm inside looking out. And I adore unexpected things!"

A trim maid was waiting in the upper hall. "This way to your room, Miss," she looked at Nan. "If you will give me your keys I will unpack your bags."

"See you at cocktails," Reed said. She turned and there he was right behind her. He always was near her elbow, so it seemed. "And make it snappy, Sally," he whispered. "I'll be waiting—impatiently."

She wriggled a finger at him, dimples flying, eyes brilliant; then followed the maid, who had preceded her.

"If you'll give me your keys, Miss, I'll unpack while you have your bath."

Nan opened her handbag, took out a

"I could listen to you all my life," Reed declared. "But you aren't going to," Sally grinned as she arose from the piano bench little ring of keys. At the end of the room through an open door, she caught a glimpse of a shining bathroom done in daffodil yellow.

She was glad she had packed her loveliest evening gown. It was new and smart, bought for that last recital she had given for her pupils.

Excitement still lingered in her eyes and colored her cheeks rose-red.

"Such fun! I'll think only of tonight, for tomorrow the butterfly will fold her wings. I'll no longer be Sally, the heiress and art student. Tomorrow I must be on my way, but tonight is mine and what I won't do with it!"

SHE heard gay voices in the hall calling to each other. Heard light feet running down the stairs, opened her bedroom door, saw Reed lounging against the opposite wall.

"Of all things! Are you my shadow or something?"

Silently he looked at her, then drew a deep, unsteady breath. "There ought to be a law against you. No girl has any right to be so devastating."

She gave him a side-wise glance from eyes brilliant as jewels. Reed caught her as she slipped past him, held her and kissed the top of her bright curly head.

"You work fast, Reed." She slipped from his arms, ran down the hall.

"Sally, wait. Have a heart." She heard him running behind her.

"I've a heart all right and I'm taking care of it," she flashed over her shoulder.

Later the butler brought her cocktail and there was Reed at her shoulder. He lifted his glass. Over its rim his dark eyes held hers.

"To you, imp," he smiled.

"How does one get rid of you?" she wanted to know.

"One doesn't," he chuckled.

A hot sweet fire ran in her veins and melody beat in her heart. It seemed if she were to bend her head and listen, she could hear its music.

"Don't be an idiot," she told herself swiftly. "Reed is Big Time and you are only a little teacher of piano—"

Reed strolled across the room and Dick took his place. Dinner was announced. Dick took her in but there was Reed on the other side of her.

"You see?" he asked complacently.

"Here. Say something nice to me, darling. I'll lap up any little crumb—don't be so stingy."

"What a line he has!" She made her eyes round with admiration.

"I could shake you," he growled. "Listen, you. Don't you know that wind blew you right into my heart?"

Dick said something to her and she turned to him. But he could have talked Chinese for all she knew. She could only hear Reed's words repeating—"right into my heart—"

DINNER over, they strolled into the lofty drawing room. Nan went to the piano—those keys looked tempting. She seated herself while Dick lounged beside her. She ran her hands over the keys testing the tone, then the room was filled with music.

They fell silent, held by the power and passion in this girl's hands.

"You're a finished musician," Reed said, standing behind her. "I could listen to you all my life."

She rose from the piano bench. "But you aren't going to," she grinned.

She looked up at him. Her breath caught at the dark fire in his eyes. Could it be possible that he really cared!

They clamored for more. Mrs. Mason said: "Kay never mentioned that you are a finished pianist, child. Do give us more."

She played half an hour, the keys singing under her hands, then rose laughing, shaking her head at their noisy applause.

They rolled back the rugs in the big square hall, got a dance program on the radio and drifted together in couples.

Reed, of course, was at Nan's elbow. As they floated down the dark polished floor he said: "You heard what I told you at dinner?"

"I'm hard of hearing. You'll have to use pantomime."

He danced her under the wide staircase, stopped and kissed her. A hard, swift, half-angry kiss.

"How do you like that pantomime?" he growled.

"Well—I've been kissed more artistically, she jeered and hoped he did not notice how breathless was her voice.

"Give me the name of this kissing artist and I'll wring his neck," Reed growled.

"He is giving me," Nan, told herself. "A terrific rush because he thinks I am Sally—the heiress. Money marries money."

They put on little peaked caps, musical with bells, that had been dinner favors. Nan looked more like a gay little elf than ever with a red bell-strung cap perched on her bright hair.

During the dance the boys cut in constantly and Reed no longer had things his own way. Nan certainly knew how to dance. When Reed swung her down the hall to a slow romantic waltz, he said softly:

"I love you, you little imp of mischief. What are you going to do about it?" His lips brushed her ear.

"Reed," she said unsteadily. "And you love me. You are loving me with your eyes, with that little throb in your voice—"

Dick cut in. She was saved a reply. Two o'clock and Nan stood at her bedroom window, face cupped in her hands, staring out at the silent landscape. The clouds were scurrying away as though bent on important missions.

"The storm is over. I'll leave tomorrow after breakfast. I'll tell them at breakfast who I am. I wonder how they'll take it? Reed will be terribly crestfallen. He's given me such a furious whirl, thinking I'm Sally—the heiress."

That thought was so unpleasant that Nan thrust it from her swiftly. But she could not thrust aside the cold hand that held her heart.

TOWARD dawn she fell asleep and in a dream heard Reed's voice: "See here, Sally, if you won't marry me, they can take me out and shoot me at sunrise for all I care."

She woke laughing, found brilliant sunlight filling the room. She heard the dressing gong and the laughter died. No more dreams. But how sweet. Bitter—sweet.

She had packed before she had gone to bed. Everything was ready. She bathed and dressed quickly, ran downstairs.

Reed sat opposite her in the breakfast room. He could look at her here without turning his head.

"I'll explode my bomb right after breakfast," Nan told herself as she listened to them planning the day's amusement.

They had almost finished breakfast when the footman entered the room.

"What is it, Sims?" Mrs. Mason asked. "There is a young lady in the hall, Madam, who says she is Miss Sally Evans. She says the storm detained her yesterday. She came by train this morning and taxied from the village."

Dead silence fell. Nan saw the startled faces. The room seemed to be filled with eyes—staring eyes.

"But" Mrs. Mason paused in bewilderment. She looked swiftly at Nan.

He didn't even say good-by, just looking at me. He's the only stuffed shirt among all these boys. Every one else was so sweet, such good sports—"

Her head went up but her heart went down to her little oxford and her throat was hot and tight with tears she fought back.

"I won't cry over him. I won't!"

She hurried to the house phone and called the garage, asked the chauffeur to run her car to the front entrance.

"It is there, Miss, and it is all right now. I put in a new spark plug."

"Thanks, so much."

The footman called for her bags. "This household moves on oiled hinges," Nan told herself as she pulled on her coat and hat and followed the footman downstairs.

At the foot of the staircase she glanced down the hall. It was there Reed had told her he loved her. A hand caught her heart and twisted it.

From the breakfast room voices and laughter drifted to the hall.

"He has the real Sally now and she certainly is easy on the eyes. He will be telling her tonight that he loves her. Reed doesn't let any grass grow under his feet. And—I hate him!"

DESPITE herself, hot tears stung her eyelids and a little sob caught in her throat. Then she thrust out her chin and marched out to the car.

She opened the door, stared blankly at Reed, who sat at the wheel.

"Hop in, imp," he grinned. "I'm driving you to New Haven. I'll take the train back."

Unable to speak, Nan found herself in the seat beside him. When they were on the highway, he pulled something from his pocket. "Take a look at that and read what is written on the other side," he said chuckling.

Nan stared at a small picture of Sally taken in a fancy dress costume. Slowly Nan turned the picture over and read:

"Sally as Cleopatra at Des Arts ball. Don't let mother see this. Sally's lack of clothes would shock mother."

Fixedly, Nan stared at those words. After a long silent moment:

"Then you knew all the time that I was not Sally," she said unsteadily.

"Sure I knew. Kay sent me this a month ago. I kept quiet. I wanted to see if you could put it over. Besides—I fell in love with you at first sight. Believe it or not."

For a moment he was busy with the car, then he glanced sidewise at the girl's still face. When he saw her eyes, his courage leaped.

"Paris," he said, "is at its best in Spring. Would you like to go there on our honeymoon, darling?"

"Reed!" she whispered.

"Then slip down in your seat and put your head on my shoulder, you little imp," he said adoringly.

The Book Mark

By Joseph C. Keoley

Divorce and After

CALL IT FREEDOM. By Marian Sims. 320 pp. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.50.

Back from Reno, where she has divorced her drunken husband, Martha Freer Harvey is faced with the problem of starting life anew in the little North Carolina city that was her husband's home. How she meets many difficult situations and develops so that she can calmly meet the future make a story that is well worth the reading.

In writing "Call It Freedom," Marian Sims has drawn a picture of a small community that will be familiar to many. It is a community of average people, preoccupied with golfing, dancing, drinking and card-playing. Into this society, Martha attempts to resume her former place, but learns that things are different when one is divorced, particularly when one is an attractive divorcee of only thirty-four.

As one who has been to Reno, Martha is looked upon as fair prey by the males of the community. There are three men, however, who are most intrigued by her, and it is her experiences with these three which cause her to realize that she can at last stand alone, even though it means the renunciation of the man she loves.

The general interest of the theme, and Miss Sims' sympathetic and delightful presentation of it make this one of the season's best books of fiction. It is just about perfect for warm-weather reading.

1937 Messiah

GOD IN A ROLLS ROYCE. By John Hoshor. 272 pp. New York: Hillman-Curl. $2.50.

This story of the little Negro enigma, Father Divine, unlike Parker's "The Incredible Messiah," does not attempt to explain why such a phenomenon came to be; it states the case in the form of good reporting. If you are interested in the social implications of Father Divine, we recommend you to Mr. Parker's book; if you want to know as much as possible about the good Father's strange cult, we refer you to Mr. Hoshor's study.

He has done a remarkable job of compilation, considering how shy Father Divine and all his angels and disciples are of publicity—of certain kinds. He tells of the hazy, down-South background of George Baker, who used to cut hedges in Baltimore. He tells how Baker came in contact with a missionary of his own race, called Father Jehovah, and how the man's teachings influenced him.

With careful attention to detail, Mr. Hoshor traces the rise of the undersized Father from the time he identified himself with Father Jehovah until he became a figure of at least national prominence. Or, as Mr. Hoshor puts it: "This unschooled negro . . . directly affects the daily lives and actions of more individuals in these United States than any other living person." We can't quite agree with that statement, but there is no denying the power of the man.

It is an absorbing story of a fascinating character, and we recommend it to your attention. Of late, Father Divine and his enthusiastic followers have become more and more prominent in the headlines. Mr. Hoshor's book will give you some interesting highlights on those black headlines.

From Abroad

WE COVER THE WORLD. By Sixteen Foreign Correspondents, Edited by Eugene Lyons. 111 pp. New York: Harcourt, Brace and Co. $3.

A magic carpet piloted by sixteen of the world's best known newspapermen is "We Cover the World." In it they take the reader to every corner of the world in which things are happening, and show him the what, who, when, why, where and how. In many cases the why and the how are explained as they never were in the dispatches of the correspondents—a case in point being James A. Mills' thoughts concerning Queen Marie of Rumania.

To present an idea of the amount of territory covered by this book, following are the correspondents who contributed: James A. Mills, of the AP; Karl von Wiegand, of Universal Service; Frazier Hunt, now with NEA; Linton Wells of INS; Negley Farson, author of "Way of a Transgressor"; Hallett Abend, of the New York Times; Junius B. Wood, formerly of the Chicago Daily News; William Henry Chamberlin, of the Christian Science Monitor; George Seldes; Mary Knight, now with Literary Digest; Frank H. Hedges, with the North American Newspaper Alliance; Randall Gould, with the Christian Science Monitor; Jack Starr-Hunt, of the New York Herald-Tribune; H. R. Ekins, the Scripps-Howard reporter who made the first trip around the world on commercial airlines; Eugene Lyons, former UP correspondent and author; and Webb Miller, chief of the UP service in Europe.

There is no point in trying to describe all that these international newshawks tell about. Russia, Ethiopia, the Orient, the Near East, Spain, the Balkans—these and way stops are the scenes of the activities they describe. What they saw there makes fascinating reading. An obvious advantage of the form in which the book is written is that, besides being authoritative, it maintains interest because of the different styles of writing.

To those who are interested in what is happening in the world today—and who isn't?—this book will prove highly valuable in showing what is happening behind the scenes.

Want A Hobby?

If you ever find yourself feeling listless and losing interest in life generally, don't think you need a doctor or even a psychiatrist. You will probably find a remedy in "Hobbies for Everybody," by Ruth Lampland.

Although "Hobbies for Everybody" was published in 1934, by Harper's, it is still, in our opinion, the finest book on hobbies ever issued. It is complete, covering subjects from autographs and cartooning to pottery, model-building and yachting. In all, more than fifty different types of hobbies are discussed, and a further guide to each is presented in the form of a bibliography concerning each—just in case you become interested.

If Miss Lampland had discussed each hobby herself, telling of its good points, the book undoubtedly would have been worth reading. However, that was not her procedure. Shrewdly, she persuaded experts in those hobbies to describe them. Now if there is anything more enthusiastic than a confirmed hobbyist, I don't know what it is. And with more than fifty hobbyists selling you on their enthusiasms, the reader is soon faced with the problem of diminishing sales resistance. Particularly when the hobbyists are such eloquent advocates as Crosby Gaige, Ellis Parker Butler, Eva Le Gallienne, Tony Sarg, Ely Culbertson, Fannie Hurst and Don Marquis. Mr. Marquis' hobby, incidentally, is beans.

The sum total of their arguments is that there's still plenty of fun left in the old world—if we just find ourselves a hobby. If you're interested, get yourself a copy of "Hobbies for Everybody." But we warn you, before you're finished you'll be collecting something or other, or going in for sports or having fun in any one of fifty-plus ways.

A NATION'S RISE

THE MIRACLE OF ENGLAND. By Andre Maurois. 500 pp. New York: Harper & Bros. $3.75.

One of the most fascinating books of the year is this brilliant story telling of the growth of England from an island kingdom overrun by successive waves of conquering hordes, to an empire comprising a third of the earth's surface.

With his usual clarity and his genius for organizing facts and disposing of the superfluous, Andre Maurois has made "The Miracle of England" more than a history. He has peopled its pages with human beings, and in doing so has made the book a glowing, living narrative.

Fittingly, M. Maurois has gone back into antiquity to trace the tangled racial threads that make up the Englishman. Stonehenge, with its evidences of Mediterranean origin, is his starting point in this, and from that beginning he brings in, in their turn, Celts, Romans, Angles, Jutes, Saxons, Germans, Danes and Normans. The effect that each race had upon the ultimate Englishman makes up the first part of the book.

With this background the reader is prepared to understand what caused England to become great. Providing a key to the British character, it gives one a truer insight into the reasons for the nation's development. Knowing the Briton, one more readily understands why he cast off feudalism more quickly than did most other medievalists. The religious wars are more understandable as well as the growth of democracy, and all the other elements that entered into Britain's development into the most powerful empire the world has ever known.

This, of course, provides merely the "plot" of this absorbing story. Even more fascinating, because of the magic of Andre Maurois' pen, is the cast. In this cavalcade can be found Caesar and his legions, William the Conqueror, Queen Elizabeth and the titans who surrounded her, Henry VIII with his wives and church troubles, Nelson, Wellington, Disraeli, Queen Victoria, King Edward VIII, and, bringing up the rear, King George VI.

If you have been intending to look more deeply into the subject of English history some day, here is your chance to fulfill your promise to yourself, and at the same time secure a great deal of enjoyment. "The Miracle of England" is one of the important books of this or any year.

Peggy Had A Manuscript

The discovery of "Gone With the Wind" will go down in publishing history as one of the most fortunate happenings that ever befell a publishing house. Whether it was a matter of luck or not, is a debatable question.

H. S. Latham, vice president of Macmillan's, was traveling through the South in 1935 to look up new authors. In Atlanta he had dinner with two women friends, and they discussed new writers. Finally one of the women, a Mrs. Perker-son, timidly said: "Peggy has a manuscript."

Mr. Latham expressed a polite interest in it, and asked to see it. When it was delivered to him he did more than give it a mere courtesy reading, even though that was the only thing necessary. But it was just as well he did give it the same careful attention he would have given the manuscript of a big "name" writer. As you have probably guessed, the story was "Gone With the Wind" and "Peggy" was Margaret Mitchell.

Footnotes

Can you imagine a detective story without a detective? That's the case in "The Borgia Blade," just published by Appleton-Century. The mystery is solved by a crook.

Simon & Schuster clarify a point concerning the best-seller, "The Outward Room," which they publish. The title, they point out, comes from the lines of John Donne:

"Think then, my soul, that death is but a Groome,
Which brings a Taper to the outward room."

In a previous issue of this magazine we referred to the book on marriage written a number of years ago by Leon Blum, who is now Premier of France. The volume is said to contain statements that are now embarrassing to M. Blum. American rights for the book have been obtained by the J. B. Lippincott Co., and it will be issued by them under the title "Marriage" on June 30.

Well up in the list of current best-sellers are two books reviewed on this page a few weeks ago—"Boy in Blue," by Royce Brier, and "The Laurels Are Cut Down," by Archie Binn. We were correct in hailing them as potential best-sellers, even though we did transpose the cuts of the authors.

Irene Wicker, known to radio listeners as the Singing Lady, can well be considered an authority on children's books. It is interesting, then, to learn that she considers the Mary Poppins books for children as among the finest juvenile stories ever written.

"What Ho!" by Richard Connell, published by Putnam, will be produced by Paramount with Gary Cooper in the leading role. The picture is supposed to be ready for release in the Fall.

The publishers of "Gone with the Wind," Macmillan, are ready with a successor to be issued late in July. The name of the book is "And So Victoria." The author is Vaughn Wilkins. It is said to run to approximately a thousand pages, and the setting is English.

Air Pistol Shooting Is Society's Newest Sport

New York Socialites Display Keen Eyes and Steady Nerves at Novel Shooting Party

Air pistol shooting, which has been rapidly gaining in popularity during the last few months, promises to become society's favorite diversion this summer. One of the most recent parties featuring this new sport was sponsored by Mrs. Howard Boulton, well known New York society matron, (second from right) at her country estate near Hewlett, Long Island. Target shooting events which she staged proved so popular her guests decided to form the Targeteer Club. Current popularity of air pistol shooting began at Florida resorts early this year, when many then this type of shooting has won great favor in the movie colony on the west coast. It has been a popular choice at charity bazaars. Hostesses have discovered it to be the answer to their entertainment problems, and many well known sportsmen have found it the ideal pastime for keeping their aim true.

Cool Fruit Juices Are Refreshing

You'll like these desserts built around fruit juices. They seem to be perfect answers to the tired summer appetite. In hot weather people don't want heavy desserts any more than they want heavy entrees like roasts and steaks. Something light and appealing that won't build up body heat and make the "dog days" seem even hotter than they actually are—which, heaven knows, is hot enough—is called for. So try some of these recipes and see if they don't help solve that annoying summer assert problem.

Grapefruit Chiffon Pie: 4-inch pie, tablespoon plain gelatin, 1/2 cup cold water, 4 eggs, 1 cup sugar, 1/2 cup grapefruit juice, 1/2 teaspoon salt, baked pastry shell.

Soften gelatin in cold water. Beat egg yolks well and add 1/2 cup sugar. Then add grapefruit juice and salt. Cook in double boiler until of custard consistency. Add softened gelatin and stir well. Cook. Beat egg whites very stiff. Fold remaining 1/2 cup sugar into egg whites and then slowly fold in cooled custard mixture. Fill pastry shell and chill.

Luganberry Sherbet: 4 to 6 servings. One-half cup canned or fresh loganberry juice, 1/2 teaspoon lemon rind, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1/2 cup sugar, 1 pint milk.

Mix juices, rind and sugar. Stir until sugar is dissolved. Pour this fruit mixture into the milk and place in freezing tray of automatic refrigerator. Freeze until nearly solid, then remove and beat well. Return and continue to freeze.

Pineapple Savarian Cream: 4 to 6 servings. One No. 2 can pineapple juice, 1/3 cup sugar, 2 eggs, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon plain gelatin, 1/3 cup orange juice, grated rind 1/2 orange.

Cook pineapple juice, sugar, salt and beaten egg yolks in top of double boiler for 10 minutes (keeping out 1/2 cup pineapple juice). Remove from fire. Add gelatin softened in pineapple juice and stir until dissolved. Add orange juice and rind. Stand until mixture begins to thicken. Then fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Chill and serve in sherbet glasses with orange segments.

How to Banish Oil From Your Skin

Summer brings better chances for the girl with oily skin. Gradual sun-tanning will help materially. But don't try to get your beneficial sun-tan all at once. It will harm you greatly.

Exercise in the open air is also another aid to ridding your skin of its excessive oiliness. If nothing else, at least walk a mile or two every day. Try getting up a little earlier and walk all or part of the way to your office.

Fruit juices, salads and fresh and raw vegetables all are part of the cure. These things are plentiful and cheaper now. Include them in your beauty budget.

Another simple but important part of the treatment is soap and water. Yes, frequent washing of the skin with lukewarm water and mild soap. This washing is not only cleansing, but it also is slightly antiseptic and also mild and stimulating. Oily skin needs scrupulous cleanliness.

If you use a cleansing cream or liquid cleanser, be sure to use an astringent or skin freshener afterward in order to remove every trace of oil from the skin. For powder base, select a slightly thickish lotion, the kind so often used for chapped hands. For evening and special occasions, liquid powder base can be used. Use a light, flurvy type of face powder, never a heavy type.

Clean New Fabric With Care

To wash or dry clean—that is the question. Phil Cooper, an eastern expert in cleaning for many years, gives a few useful hints about cleaning the newer fabrics.

"Marquisette needs very careful treatment," he says. "The fabric is processed with a gum arabic in order to give body and stiffness. This gum arabic comes out entirely in washing and to a slight degree in dry cleaning. So watch yourself and don't let a marquisette dress get very soiled. Have it dry cleaned quickly before it must be given a long run in the fluid, then it will retain its original condition."

"If you must wash marquisette at home, first dissolve a little clear gelatin in the water and make sure there are no undissolved particles left in the water. After washing in this mixture, shake the dress well to get rid of surplus water and press it nearly, but not quite, dry on the wrong side, using a damp cheese cloth."

Another new fabric is called congo cloth. It can be successfully washed at home and also perfectly dry cleaned. "For washing, use very soft lukewarm or cold water. Add a small amount of soda to soften water if necessary. Dry at room temperature and press 100 per cent dry," Mr. Cooper says.

As to the printed and flowered cotton and linen material now being used for hostess gowns and so-called peasant dresses, Phil Cooper has this advice:

"Trust them only to dry cleaning because they are dyed with a top dye which is not fast and likely to run or fade with washing. However, if you insist on washing them yourself, follow these rules and you may have fair luck.

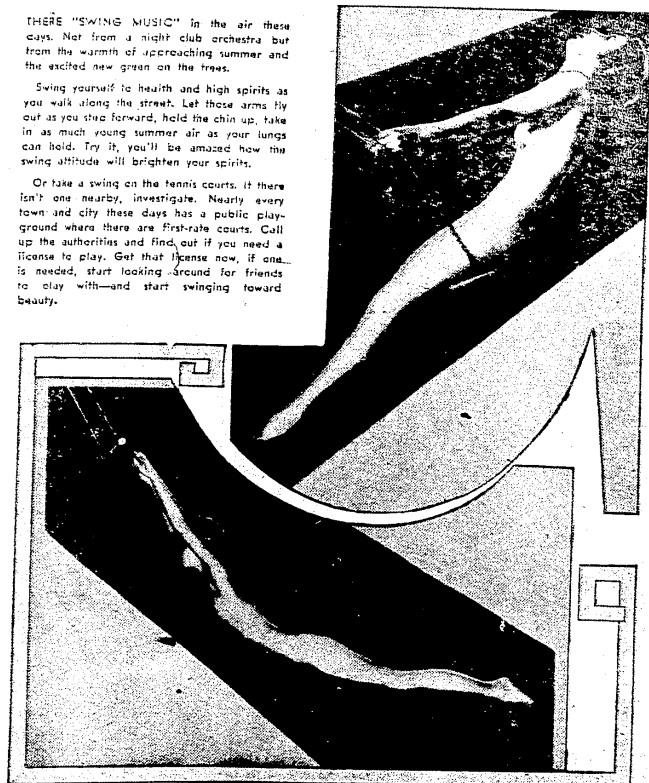

"Wash only in cold water with a little vinegar or salt added to it. This will keep the color from running. When pressing, be sure the washed material is no more than three-fourths dry. Press on the right side with no cloth, and under no circumstances use any beeswax when pressing."

SWING ON TO BEAUTY

THESE "SWING MUSIC" in the air these days. Not from a night club orchestra but from the warmth of approaching summer and the excited new green on the trees.

Swing yourself to health and high spirits as you walk along the street. Let these arms fly out as you step forward, hold the chin up, take in as much young summer air as your lungs can hold. Try it, you'll be amazed how the swing attitude will brighten your spirits.

Or take a swing on the tennis courts. If there isn't one nearby, investigate. Nearly every town and city these days has a public playground where there are first-rate courts. Call up the authorities and find out if you need a license to play. Get that license now, if one is needed, start looking around for friends to play with—and start swinging toward beauty.

Humor Parade

"Sit back and relax! He'll find a way out."

I. KLEIN

"Can you spare this chair, sir?"

"I just dropped in to say hello."

"Every time he reads about the Communists, he works himself up into a lather."

THE DORGAN ESCAPE FROM THE COUNTY JAIL HAS CAUSED PANIC FOR MILES AROUND. SHERIFF TOM DRAKE HAS BEEN ACCUSED OF LAXITY IN GUARDING THE JAIL. ON ACCOUNT OF THIS, THE SHERIFF HAS VOWED TO GET THE DESPERADO DEAD OR ALIVE. WHILE ON HIS TRAIL, ON THE ROAD TO VIEJA MOUNTAINS, A SPIRAL OF SMOKE ATTRACTED THEIR ATTENTION. WORKING ON A HUNCH, SHERIFF DRAKE DECIDED TO INVESTIGATE. AS THEY APPROACHED, HE ORDERED THE BOYS TO DISMOUNT AND GET READY TO SURROUND THE PLACE. THE STORY CONTINUES.....

GIT YORE TOMMY GUNS READY, BOYS! LOU, CLOSE IN THROUGH TH' RIGHT; PAT, THROUGH TH' LEFT; HANK, CLIMB THAT ROCK AN' GIVE US TH' SIGNALS; PETE, YOH AN' ME ARE WALKIN' RIGHT IN. LET'S GO!

LOOK, SHERIFF, THERE'S HANK IN FULL VIEW, I RECKON NOBODY'S THERE
