TOY WILL GIVE ESCANABA TALK

Candidate for Governor Has Public Meetings Here Tonight

Harry S. Toy, former Michigan attorney general and supreme court judge, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Michigan, will address a public dinner at the Sherman hotel at 6:30 tonight. Mr. Toy will arrive in Escanaba this afternoon from Manistiquet, where he will be met by a delegation from the local Toy-for-Governor committee. The committee in charge of the dinner arrangements to-night announced that the gathering was open to the public. Reservations for the dinner must be made by noon today at the Sherman. Those who are unable to attend the dinner are invited to come after the dinner and hear the candidate's address.

Following the dinner program at the Sherman, which will include also vocal music by the Knights of Columbus male chorus, Mr. Toy will go to the Delta hotel to meet local delegations at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Toy became well known in Michigan through his cleanup of the "purple gang" as prosecutor in Wayne county. He later served as attorney general, and was appointed to the state supreme court. He is a World War veteran who was decorated for bravery, coming out of the war with the rank of Captain. He is now a colonel in the reserves.

The Story of Lumbering Is Tale Of Man's Rise

Washington, D. C.—The tree has always been regarded as a symbol of life, and the story of the tree through the ages is a story of civilization. The first known history of the tree starts with the Garden of Eden. The Tree Age is older than the Stone Age.

Prehistoric man found a refuge among the trees from his enemies. The ark that saved the remnant of the human race was made of trees, and wood was one of the first things to be used after the Deluge. Man's affection for trees and his confidence in wood have been retained through all ages.

The tree was the beginning of architecture. The first columns and pillars were the trunks of trees. Solomon sent out 80,000 woodsmen to the mountains to cut and hew fir trees for his temple and King Hiram of Tyre furnished cedars of Lebanon to help in its erection.

The raft, the crude sled, and the canoe dug out of a log, furnished man his first conveyance to move out of his immediate environs. DaGama, Magellan, and Columbus made their adventurous voyages on ships made of wood. In riggers and sloops the early settlers of America trusted their lives against the breakers of the sea. They had confidence in wood as well as in a land that offered them new opportunities.

Colonists turned to the virgin forests for material for shelter, for construction of places to store their crops. Construction of every type was of wood; pins made of wood served as nails. It was still the Age of Wood in a new world. The first cargo sent by the colonists of Virginia to their native land was cedar logs, and settlers in New England found pine timber a principal export. Later pine became the backbone of frontier trade.

Wood has been the pioneer of progress in America. The docks and wharves, early river freighters and barges were made possible through the utilization of trees. Factories that sprang up along the Atlantic seaboard were, with rare exceptions, built of wood. The stage coach of the early times was constructed largely of wood, while the first train travel was made on wooden beams.

All the gold that has been mined in America and her possessions since the days when Cortez and Pizarro looted the Aztecs holds a poor comparison in value with the American forests. It was a house made of wood that inspired John Howard Payne to write an immortal song; George Washington chose wood for Mount Vernon. No complete substitute for it as a home building material has been found, though stone and brick find a near approach. But wood, the indispensable building material, is necessary for the artistic completion of a home.

Conserving the Nation's Wood

Since 1906, the State of Washington, with the exception of 1914 when Louisiana took first place, has led in lumber production. Formerly the Northeast supplied the nation with oak and other hardwood, but the source of supply has shifted to the Central and Lake States, and along the Appalachians and lower Mississippi region.

While the lumber industry has more than met the nation's demands for lumber, it has from the beginning followed wasteful, destructive practices in the woods, which have exhausted the forests of one region after another and left to the nation the task of restoring million of acres of cut-over lands to a productivity that will support rural populations and industries. The problem is being met through many agencies, especially the United States Forest Service. To make sure that the nation does not become woodless, the United States government owns about 100,000,000 acres of forest as a perpetual supply of timber.

It was through the love of trees and the necessity of conserving the nation's wood supply that fire prevention became a national topic, stressed annually by leaders in all walks of life. Cigarettes and matches tossed in the woods without being extinguished cause the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars each year.

However, there is no likelihood that the country's supply of wood will be exhausted, as almost a quarter of the entire area of the country is still forest, many acres of which are virgin. Conservation of forests is now a business and wood considered a crop to be cultivated and scientifically harvested at the proper time. More and more, farmers are turning to the forests as a profitable crop, and are planting trees on land where other crops have failed.

The lumber industry, too, has adopted practices of forest conservation and economy. Lumber wastage is being turned into beneficial uses. The industry has also reorganized its business structure to meet the requirements and conditions of the times. Thus a united front has been presented to save, conserve, and properly utilize the tree—a symbol of life—man's silent friend in all ages.

Women's Clothes Are Mirroring Fair Designs

World's Fair hats, jewelry and play clothes have come to town. They are first before the footlights in a great pageant of fashions inspired by the New York World's Fair of 1939.

Most of the hats have steeple crowns inspired by the towering trylon that is part of the theme center on the World's Fair grounds.

The aquelon colors—pastel pink, light turquoise blue, canary and wine—named for the columns of light which are to be scattered over the fair grounds, are appearing in lingerie and sports frocks.

WE, the WOMEN

BY RUTH MILLETT

Out of school and out of work. That is the story of 400,000 young people—from 16 to 24—who live in New York City. And it is the story of thousands in every good-sized city in the country.

We are inclined to put all the blame on the depression—when some of it should be put on the schools.

They are pushing young people through their formal education with little thought of whether these young people are being given what they will need to help them earn a living.

Here is the picture as an educator recently painted it for me. And she wasn't drawing on her imagination for she has interviewed hundreds of young people in the last few years—young people who are desperate for work.

A student majors in a foreign language, and ends up with a smattering of French or Spanish that is utterly useless to him so far as marketing his knowledge is concerned.

Another specializes in philosophy—and then is faced with the problem of selling philosophy to an employer. And so it goes—in high schools and colleges.

Students are permitted to squander years of their lives on subjects which do nothing to equip them for a niche in the economic world.

That is all right for the student who doesn't have to fit into a niche—but the majority of them must become self-supporting once their education is completed.

The schools are also failing miserably in initiating their students into the mysteries of job-hunting. Nor do they give them any idea of the personality adjustments that are necessary in almost any kind of work.

As this same educator said, "Somewhere along the line young people should learn that it isn't always essential to 'be one's self.' It is often more important to sacrifice a little ego—if that will overcome obstacles or keep office relationships pleasant."

At one time in the country's history, perhaps, there was time for "fancy learning"—but with boys and girls both faced with the necessity of earning a living in a highly competitive business world—the emphasis today should be on "How to get a job—and keep it."

Rattlesnake Day. Deadwood, S. D. (AP)—Alvin Martin hunts rattlesnakes as his Sunday diversion. His biggest catch was 110 rattlers to fill orders from zoos and a circus.

Concrete Road to Float. Lawrence, Kas. (AP)—A concrete highway underpass, five feet thick, will "float" on waters of the Kaw river. The thick roadbed is necessary because the nearby river has saturated the soil upon which the foundation will be built.

For the Faith

Wolseth, N. D. (AP)—Members of the Nidaros church believe in working for their religion. When the church coffers ran low, one farmer donated the use of a quarter section of land, others provided teams and tractors, and all turned to and seeded the fields to wheat. When it is harvested, the money will go into the church treasury.

You'll want to FISH AGAIN in MICHIGAN! To be free from care... drive with care! NATURE and man, working together, have made Michigan a superb fishing state. Nature contributed 2000 streams and 5000 lakes. Man's contribution? Wise conservation, 16 fish hatcheries, and the planting of about 200 million little fish every year! That's why Michigan abounds in fish that are waiting for your hook and line: Brook trout, brown trout and rainbow trout; bass and perch, pickerel and pike; blue gills, sunfish and muskellunge. To supplement the joys of perfect angling, you have fine highways and other transportation facilities. You have canoes, power boats and sailing craft for hire. You have historic sights, golf courses, hundreds of bathing beaches... overnight cabins and cottages... camping sites galore... and State Parks that provide chairs and tables and safe drinking water. Try Michigan—an ideal State for ideal vacations!

TRADE OUTLOOK NOT FAVORABLE

Continued gloom over the business and industrial outlook, in addition to cloudiness of Washington developments, served to further depress stocks today's market.

In dealings that barely kept the ticker tape in motion; pivotal issues slipped fractions to more than 2 points in the morning.

Feble buying support appeared in the final hour and declines were reduced in most cases at the close.

Transfers totaled only 404,600 shares compared with 760,710 last Friday. It was the smallest full day's turnover in about a week.

Although far from pleasing to commission houses, the lightness of offerings brought a little cheer to analytical forces which saw in the scantiness of dealings a sign that important holdings are still intact.

Steels led the forenoon retreat, as forecasts of a pickup of orders in this field were scarce.

The American Iron & Steel Institute subsequently announced its official estimate placing this week's mill operations at 2.9 points below the preceding week at a low mark since early in January.

Congressional travail over the wage-hour and pump-priming measures tended to keep speculative contingents from expanding commitments in stocks unduly.

Commodities displayed diverse trends. Cotton dropped sharply in the morning, reflecting another break in the staple at Liverpool.

There was an eventual comeback, but the fibre met more trouble at the finish and ended with net losses of 60 cents to $1.05 a bale.

Wheat recovered after an initial dip and finished unchanged to off 1/2 cent a bushel. Corn was down 1/2 to 5/8.

Rubber futures advanced briskly in the forenoon when the London international regulations committee cut the allowable export quota for the third quarter substantially.
