

SEEK DAMAGES FOR INJURIES

Suit Results From Crash at Days River During Smelt Jamboree

Dama ges totalling $25,000 are being sought by Paul K. Maves of 1307 Sheridan Road, meter reader for the city utilities department, and Harry Lebedka of 1303 Sheridan Road, welder, in suits now being tried before Judge Frank A. Bell in Delta county circuit court. Marion F. Long and his son, Vernon A. Long, both of Gladstone, are defendants in the suits, which are being tried together before a jury.

The suits are based on an accident which occurred on Highway US-2-41 near the Days River bridge on the night of the Smelt Jamboree at Rapid River on April 9. Maves asks $5,000 and Lebedka $20,000, according to declarations filed in the case.

Among witnesses to testify yesterday afternoon were Maves and Lebedka and Frank LaChappelle, 319 North 11th street, who was the driver of the car in which they were riding.

According to testimony by LaChappelle, he was driving south a short distance south of the Days River bridge on US-2-41 when the crash occurred. He stated on the witness stand that he was driving slowly on the right side of the road when the two cars came together.

Shortly before the accident involved in the suit there was a minor rear-end crash near the same spot. Testimony revealed that one of the cars participating in the earlier accident had not been removed from the highway when the second occurred.

Defense witnesses were not called to the stand yesterday, and the court adjourned at 4:30 o'clock at the request of Yelland and Yelland, attorneys for Maves and Lebedka. The defendants are represented by Denis McGinn.

Vienna Choir Boys To Sing Here On Oct. 28

The Vienna Choir Boys, one of the finest musical organizations in the world shown in costume above, will present a concert at the William W. Oliver Memorial auditorium in the junior high school Friday night, October 28, under the auspices of the National League of Community Concerts.

A meeting of local members of the league will be held at the junior high school this evening at 7:30 o'clock for the purpose of discussing selection of a third number in this year's series. In addition to the Vienna Choir Boys, Percy Granger, famous pianist, composer and conductor, will give a concert. The third concert will depend upon the number of memberships in the league.

Founded in 1498 by the Emperor Maximilian I, the singing unit so widely known today as the "Vienna Choir Boys" (Vienna Saengerknaben), has an unbroken history. For several centuries the only duty of the Saengerknaben was to provide appropriate music in the imperial chapel. It was, in fact, solely for this purpose that the choir was formed, and if Austria had not become a republic it is probable that extensive tours of the Vienna Choir Boys would never have been undertaken.

Until 1918 the choir flourished only at home and under the patronage of the Hapsburgs. Legions of little boys had come and gone, thoroughly cared for if they were poor but having no special privileges if they happened to come from rich families. Schubert was once among their number, later composing music especially for the use of his successors. Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven were other great composers who showed their admiration for the choir by writing for it.

Present Operettas

The establishment of a school for the boys, their branching out from sacred music to performances of "profane" little operettas like "Bastien and Bastienne" and "The Apothecary," were logical developments. Meanwhile, all expenses including bills for the boys' education and maintenance, as well as pensions for those alumni entitled to such considerations, were paid from the imperial treasury. In those days the high musical status of the choir and its perfect example of ancient chivalry in art, with the protective attitude of the cultured patron on the one hand, and the willing service of the artist on the other.

When the World War turned Austria into a republic, the choir, royalist though it was, survived as a private enterprise before it was taken over by the reorganized city government of Vienna. No longer bound to the House of Hapsburg, the Vienna Choir Boys could, and did, begin the series of tours which have carried their name into the musical capitals of the world. In groups of twenty they have travelled far afield, one such group visiting the United States and Canada for the first time in 1932. Since that date, American tours of the Viennese choristers have been annual events.

Conducted by Victor Gombos, the Vienna Choir Boys have, as usual, an extensive repertoire which ranges from classical religious music to secular and more modern part-songs, and one-act operettas which are given in costume. Songs in English, learned

Arne Sviland Loses Fingers In Suction Fan

Arne Sviland, well known Escanaba painter, suffered the loss of two fingers of his left hand, when he caught it in a suction fan, while at work on the new A. & P. store building Wednesday. He was rushed to St. Francis hospital, for treatment for the badly lacerated hand, where it was found necessary to amputate two fingers.

Bulldozer Crashes Down Obstacles In Clearing of Land

Crashing down stumps and young trees as it levels off fields, a tractor powered bulldozer is now at work clearing land for planting at the Sedenquist farm on the old State Road near Ford River. The machine was at work yesterday on a five-acre field, which it covered once in three and one-half hours.

Its front is armed with a scoop-like plow, which may be raised and lowered by the operator while the machine is in motion. Yesterday it was employed to level off a very rough field with a few small trees studding it, but today it will be put to work on rougher ground which is dotted with stumps and larger trees.

Geared to develop a maximum of pushing power, the bulldozer shoves its way through all obstacles. Encountering a sharp rise that is to be leveled off, its scoop-like front pushes the soil up ahead of it, and when it comes to a low spot the soil flows down and fills it. Ordinarily the machine is driven over a field twice, once lengthwise and once crosswise. Trees fall before it and stumps are uprooted as it forces its way across the field.

Speed of operation and cost of land clearing depends largely on the type of work that is to be done. Makers claim that the machine will clear half an acre per hour at a cost of about $4.00 per hour, on average land.

The Capital PARADE

By Alsop and Kintner

Copyright, 1934, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc. Washington, Oct. 12.—Considering the creeping terrors aroused in business by the anti-monopoly investigation, it is interesting to find an employe of Morgan, Stanley and Company being considered for an investigator's job. After all, the underwriting house is an offshoot of J. P. Morgan and company, and the great parent bank is certain to be one of the principal topics of anti-monopolistic inquiry.

Yet the investigating committee's securities and exchange commission division is seriously thinking of asking Hilton Moore, Morgan, Stanley's well known railroad expert, to head up the investment banking section of the committee staff. Chairman William O. Douglas of the SEC, who is usually thought of in Wall Street as an enemy of the whole Morgan connection, has already been consulted on the subject. And he has told his subordinates to try to get Moore if they want to.

Knowing that Moore already has a job far better than the government can give him, and being discouraged by many previous refusals from similarly placed men, the investigators may never make Moore an offer. Probably Moore would refuse if the offer were made.

But the fact that the offer is under discussion still remains, with all its implications. The investigators are so anxious to do telling and scientific work that they will even go to the camp of the supposed enemy for competent assistance.

Job Begging

Besides suggesting the probable character of the monopoly inquiry, the discussion of an offer to Moore illustrates another fundamentally important problem.

There was a time, at the exciting start of the new deal, when the government had only to crook its finger to get any talent it needed. Then a continuous stream of young men and old, from industry, the universities and the professions, poured into Washington to play their parts in the fascinating experiment. But now, the new deal seems to have only two years to run. Even the young graduates of the great law schools have ceased to enter the government in such numbers, and mature experts like Hilton Moore have become all but unobtainable.

The anti-monopoly investigation is now being really hampered by this scarcity of good volunteers. Being richly technical, it requires the best-trained minds. The original plan was to get as many investigators as possible from business and the professions, but it has been found necessary to go to the universities almost every time. For example, one of the most important posts, that of chief of the insurance staff, has just been given to Professor Donald Davenport of the Harvard business school. And meanwhile the job of counsel to the study is still going begging, although it's probably the best spot for a lawyer in the whole investigative set-up.

Coming Collapse

The scarcity of men technically equipped for the big inquiry merely dramatizes the vital need for some American equivalent of the British civil service. People who talk of "civil service" in this country are under a sorry misapprehension as to the best meaning of the term. The British civil service is not a hierarchy of bureaucrats, recruited by successive examinations in pencil-sharpening, short-hand and government book-keeping. It is a staff of independent, educated minds, recruited by examinations testing the whole training, intended to weed out the men generally fit to handle large governmental problems.

The volunteers of the new deal, whatever their other defects, temporarily filled the gap left in the American government by the absence of a civil service like the British. For all their partisanship and their ar-grinding, the new deal volunteers have done a remarkable technical job, wielding the vast new powers of government without chaos, and spending the federal billions without scandal of the Harding sort.

Men like Bill Douglas at the SEC are now much preoccupied with the problem of replacing the new deal volunteers. Douglas has a scheme for getting the large law schools to send down their best men as "apprentices" for a year or so, with the best technical jobs in the government promised to the successful candidates. There are other schemes as well. But one thing is certain. If government continues as complex as it has become, and if it is not managed by trained, disinterested minds, then government will collapse under its own weight.

SERIAL STORY MURDER TO MUSIC

Copyright, 1934 NEA Service, Inc. BY NARD JONES

CAST OF CHARACTERS
MYRNA DOMBEY—heroine. Wife of the sensational string band leader.
ROBERT TAIT—hero. Newspaper photographer—detective.
ANNE LISTER—Myrna's closest friend.
DANNIE FEELEY—officer assigned to investigate Ludden Dombey's murder.

CHAPTER IX
 Vaguely troubled, Bob Tait went out into the alley and climbed into the rented coupe. He was certain that the janitor wasn't lying—which meant that Harris Rogers was. Either Rogers had managed to have a key made which would fit the lock of Tait's apartment, or he had a ring of skeleton keys.

Tait shrugged. There was nothing to be gained in worrying about Harris Rogers now. The manager's reasons for wanting the corpse of Ludden Dombey to stay quiet were good reasons. Good, that is, for Harris Rogers. The thing to worry about now, Tait told himself, was the eventual fate of Myrna.

He turned the car into the street, headed for an arched driveway which would take him straight to headquarters. Inside the dingy, gray stone building he went at once to Feeley's office. That individual lolled in a deep chair, his feet on his battered desk, a black cigar stuck at an angle in his mouth, and his eyes wandering over the skyline beyond the window.

"Well, well," said Tait jovially, "is this the way a dynamo of crime detection works?"

Dannie Feeley swung his feet down and turned to regard the newspaper photographer with a fishy eye. "You," he said, and that was all.

"No other, Robert Tait." "Sit down," invited the detective. "I want to talk to you."

Bob Tait sat down and smiled at Feeley in what he hoped was a very disarming fashion. "Dannie," he said, "I've got Mrs. Ludden Dombey."

Not a flicker of expression went over Feeley's features. "I'm not surprised. And I ought to throw you in the hoosegow. I may yet. Where is she?"

"She'll be here. I'll send her down. But I'd kind of like to know what the set-up is. Will you give her a break?"

For a moment Feeley was silent. He looked out of the window, studied a thin trail of smoke from a streaked brick chimney. Then he returned his attention to Bob Tait. "Listen," he said, "I like you. You've played square with me before, and until somebody proves otherwise, I'll do it again. But you know what I want to talk to that girl. What was the idea of making her scarce?"

"I didn't. The fact is, I've been trying to find her all night. The kid is all upset. I had to convince her that she was making a mistake in running away."

Feeley grinned ironically. "That's putting it mildly. I gather, of course, that you don't think she's guilty."

"I'm not an idiot yet, Dannie, although I've been accused of coming close. She may be—but I don't think so. But you can't tell me that you've got enough to convince you that she's guilty."

"That's why I want to talk to her." He fixed Dannie with a piercing gaze. "This isn't child's play, Bob. And I'm going to put all my cards on the table. I'm on the spot with the chief. The chief is on the spot with the mayor—"

"And the mayor," put in Tait pleasantly, "is on the spot with the public. There's been a wave of crime, and the newspapers are asking why."

"That's it exactly. So I'm not pulling any punches in this Ludden Dombey business. I've got to find out who bumped him off. And there's another thing eating me, too. Leonard Macy has showed up again."

"The devil you say!" Tait knew Leonard Macy. He was a wealthy dilettante who interested himself in criminology. Macy was clever, too. He had a god mind and a lot of fancy, expensive crime-detecting equipment. He delighted in nothing more than showing up in police as a lot of blunderers.

Feeley nodded. "Sure. He's interested. This kind of thing is his dish. Lots of publicity and all that. I'm telling you, if Macy turns up something important, before we do, it means curtains for me on this job."

Tait took out a cigarette, lit it carefully. "Then you'd let me help you?"

"I'd be glad for it—if it helps you'd be giving. What makes you think you can?"

"I'm pretty sure I can. But I want a square deal for Mrs. Dombey. I don't want her made a goat because the department hasn't got anything tangible."

Feeley nodded. "I'll do what I can. But don't forget we've a prosecuting attorney who's yelling for blood. If I know Barkley, he's already got a case against Myrna Dombey that would have a jury straining to convict her."

"It's going to be tough, all right."

"Tough is the word for it," Feeley leaned forward a little. "And listen, Tait, I'm trusting you. You're not to hold anything back."

"Not a thing," Tait reached into his pocket, brought out Myrna's silk handbag and tossed it on the table. "That belongs to Myrna Dombey." Then he brought out the revolver, laid it carefully on Feeley's desk. "This was inside the bag when I picked it up right after the shooting."

Feeley turned slightly purple. "And you took it out of the bag, and have been carrying it around until the fingerprints are all smeared?"

"My theory is that the gun was fired from the bag, Dannie. Through an opening in the zipper. I don't think there'd be any fingerprints."

Feeley's thick fingers took up the bag. "How'd you get it?"

Tait told him. Feeley listened attentively, and when the newspaper photographer was through, he said, "And so you think she didn't do it? You pick up her bag from beside her, and the gun is still warm, and you figure she's innocent?"

"Yes, Dannie. I think somebody got hold of that bag, slipped the gun into it, and then tossed it onto the table again after Dombey was killed."

"It sounds fine. How you going to prove it?"

"Tait was silent. Then, slowly: "I don't know—yet."

"If you don't have Myrna Dombey down here by noon, I'm going to get out a warrant for you, and it won't be a comic sheet, either."

"She'll be here, Dannie. But you've made your agreement. I'm going to help you, and in return you're not going to use Myrna as copy for the newspaper boys."

Feeley nodded. "I made the deal, and I'll stick to it—until I'm convinced you're rooking me."

Tait got up. "Okay, then. You'll see her here at 12?"

"At 12. She'd better be here. If she's not, I'll have you brought in. And you'll be up on the third floor where the old cells are."

MAHOON APPOINTED

Iron River—R. C. Mahoon, superintendent of the Homer mine and a captain in the U. S. army reserves, returned Saturday from Chicago where he spent two weeks in conference with 19 fellow officers drafting details for the mobilization of supplies and commodities in the middle west in the event of war.

The recent war scare in Europe impelled U. S. army officials to lay plans for possible mobilization and the summoning of 20 reserve officers to Chicago to study supply needs and arrange for commodity procurement in the north central states. The Iron River man was one of the 20 officers selected.

Use of a central heating system, more than one bathroom in a house, and space-saving kitchens are all American innovations. They are, however, being taken up in the newer homes of Europe.
