BEHIND THE SCENES

By Bruce Catton

Washington—Along with all his other activities, Uncle Sam is an accomplished and experienced junk dealer.

Federal departments are forever coming into possession of things they have no special use for. When that happens they turn them over to the procurement division of the Treasury Department.

This division then hunts around until it finds some other government department that can use the things. Finding that, it offers them for public sale.

REDSKINS' BOOTS

Some queer deals are put through at times. Confiscated alcohol, for instance, may wind up in possession of the War Department to be made into gunpowder. And the copper stills which the Treasury Department occasionally seizes are given to all people—the Indians.

The reds don't use them to make firewater, though. Instead he hammers the copper into bracelets, necklaces and what-not to sell to tourists.

The Indians came in handy, too, when changing styles put an end to the fashion of wearing beads all over dresses.

Most of these beads were imported from Italy and Jugoslavia, and when the fashion changed a number of importers simply abandoned their shipments on the New York docks.

Eventually these beads landed with the procurement division, which gave them to the Indian Bureau. Now the beads are back in circulation—as examples of native American beadwork.

HATS AND FURS

The division fell heir to a lot of imported feminine hats, when certain litigation over the payment of duty dragged out so long that the hats (which had been seized by the customs men) fell completely out of style.

Old CCC barracks are given away to the Forest Service. Army overcoats left over from the World War are given to the WPA—although the Indian again is a good customer, taking these old coats to make layettes for poposes.

Silver fur seals used by smugglers have been used in costume actresses on the federal theater project. Oddly enough, workers are using silk thread that was bought by the War Department during the World War.

One of the procurement division's biggest deals was turned not long ago when the Maritime Commission dumped two big steamships in its lap. These are being converted into transports for the army.

YOUTHFUL VETERAN

Richard Riedel is only 30 years old, but he is a veteran of 21 years service on the staff of the Senate.

He started out as a page boy in 1918, progressed up through various jobs, and last year—as a 20-year veteran—was, by special act of the Senate, made press relations officer. The job keeps him busy.

He watches over the press lobby off the Senate chamber. Correspondents who want to call senators off the floor, to ask them questions, work through him.

Although he will round out a quarter-century of Senate service before he reaches the age at which a man becomes eligible to serve in the Senate, Riedel looks even younger than he is. You'd take him for a youth fresh out of college.

Congressman Clare Hoffman of Michigan has no pockets in the suits he wears in the House. It's his own idea. For one thing, he found that he had a mannerism of sticking his hands in and out of all his pockets when he was making a speech, and this looked like

SERIAL STORY 'MRS. DOC' BY TOM HORNER

COPYRIGHT, 1939. NEA SERVICE, INC.

The characters and situations in this story are wholly fictional.

CAST OF CHARACTERS ALAN WARREN—Ambitious young country doctor. EMILY WARREN—Alan's wife. ERIC KANE—Construction engineer. DR. FARRELL—Alan's elderly associate.

Yesterday, returning from a confinement case, Alan finds a wrecked coupe on the highway. He pulls open a door and the body of a man tumbles to Alan's feet.

CHAPTER V Automatically, Alan nud his gloves off and was reaching for the man's wrist. The pulse was faint—very faint. Alan figured quickly. The car had passed him before 8, and it was now after 5. Nine hours, unconscious in that blizzard. No man could live. Even if he had escaped injury when the car overturned, he should have frozen to death.

The hum of the electric heater, still running, answered one of Alan's unspoken questions. But there was no time for delay. This man must be taken to a hospital, at once. Half dragging, half carrying his heavy burden, Alan got the man up the embankment and into his own warm car. There was a chance, but even minutes would count now.

Price's farm flashed by. Pity Price hadn't seen that wreck. Say, how was Peterson? What did he have to say? Did you have a nice party?

"It was wonderful, Alan. Dr. Peterson and Mrs. Peterson are so nice. He certainly admires you. And guess what he wants, dear."

"I'm not much good at guessing. Probably he wants me to pay up my alumni dues."

"Alan... Dr. Peterson wants you to come back to St. Louis, to teach obstetrics at the school. He's going to write you all about it. You'll go, of course, won't you?"

"Let's not cross any bridges until I see it on paper. Maybe he was just making conversation—he knew it would please you."

"He really was quite serious. He and Dr. Farrell argued about it for a long time. I know he means it."

"We'll see. Now scoot, honey, while I dress. Man, am I hungry!" Emily left the room but with a quite determination burning in her eyes!

Alan did not see Dr. Farrell upon his return to the hospital and he soon forgot both his half-frozen man and Dr. Peterson's offer in his work in the delivery room. The elder physician's fears that Mrs. Olivia might have trouble were well founded, and Alan breathed a sigh of relief when the mother and a small, but perfect child were taken downstairs.

Mrs. Miles was not difficult, but her husband and her mother were, and Alan's already frayed nerves were at raw edge before he finally quieted their anxiety, and went on with the delivery. It was almost midnight before he reached home to find Dr. Farrell waiting for him.

"Your 'snow man' is getting on fine," he said, when Alan joined him at the fireside. "He wasn't so badly banged up as we thought at first. He had a nasty bump on the head, and slight concussion, but no fracture of the skull. He's suffering from severe shock and exposure, but he'll make it, unless pneumonia sets in."

"Did you find out who he is?" "Yes, a young man, Eric Kane, chief engineer in charge of that federal dam and reversion project up on the river. He stayed up there until late to be sure that the blizzard wouldn't do any harm, and then missed the turn there at Price's."

"He'd been out in the storm all afternoon and that's probably what saved his life. He had on a jacket and sweater underneath his sheepskin coat, boots, and woolen socks and underwear. He stayed warm twice as long as the average man would have. He's got a rugged constitution too, being out in the open so much. He'll be up and around in a day or so."

"Kane was asking about you—I told him you'd probably drop in. He wants to thank you for saving his life."

But Alan did not stop at Eric Kane's room in the hospital. He told himself, when the thought occurred to him, that it was because he had little time or opportunity to visit this wing of the hospital, and besides, he said, he had turned the case over to Farrell and he had no more to do with it. But the real reason was that he was afraid—afraid of the embarrassment the grateful man's thanks might cause him.

If anyone had done any saving of life, the honor belonged to Farrell, not to him. Alan had found the man, brought him to the hospital—that was true—but anyone would have done that. Perhaps if Alan could have looked into the future he might have considered, leaving Eric Kane to die in the snow.

It was no wonder that he was surprised, two evenings later to find a stranger knocking at his door.

"Come in, come in," Alan said as he opened the door. "Thanks," said the stranger. "I will. My name is Eric Kane." (To Be Continued) been thawing people out for years, drunk and sober. But I couldn't take care of Mrs. Olivia. She'll need you, and you'll have to be wide awake to pull her through. Mrs. Miles isn't going to be easy, either, with a first baby."

"I'm not tired, I'll be all right." But Alan knew that Farrell was right. Reluctantly he gave in, slipped into his overcoat again. "He's all yours, then, Dr. Farrell. Let me know how he makes out, will you?"

It was afternoon before Alan awakened. Emily was sitting on the side of his bed, when he opened his eyes. "Sorry to wake you, darling," she said. "The hospital called. They'll be needing you there soon. I thought you might like a bite to eat before you go. Lunch will be ready as soon as you're dressed. And Dr. Farrell called, too. Said the man you found in the snow was still alive and had a fighting chance."

"Good. Farrell could pull him through if anyone could. I don't see yet how that fellow escaped being frozen to death. How's the weather?"

"It's snowing again; not like last night, but softly falling, huge flakes. The papers say the cold wave is general over the whole country. One of the biggest snowstorms in years."

"I could see that last night. Say, how was Peterson? What did he have to say? Did you have a nice party?"

"It was wonderful, Alan. Dr. Peterson and Mrs. Peterson are so nice. He certainly admires you. And guess what he wants, dear."

"I'm not much good at guessing. Probably he wants me to pay up my alumni dues."

LAKE FISHING
ENDS MARCH 15

Fishermen Getting Nets
In Shape for Annual Smelt Runs

The non-commercial fishing season for upper peninsula lakes will close Wednesday, March 15, and will remain closed until May 15,
and local fishermen will be required to move their fish shanties off the inland lakes.

The bass season, which was closed at the end of December will remain closed until June 25.

The trout fishing season will open on April 29 this season, the last Saturday in April, and will remain open to Labor Day.

The open season on perch, bluegills, walleyed pike, pickerel and great northern pike, rock bass, bluegills, and sunfish is from May 15 to March 15.

However, Manistiquie fishermen will not be obliged to give up fishing completely until the season opens on game fish, for the fishing of smelt from the Great Lakes and connecting waters is legal the year around.

The annual smelt runs are expected the latter part of this month and the early part of April, and fishermen then will take huge quantities of the silver-bellied fish from the streams in dipnets.

Virtually all streams in this locality connecting Lake Michigan and productive sources of smelt during the spawning runs, and many tons of smelt are dipped night time by enthusiastic fishermen. The usual fishing license is required for the dipping of smelt from streams and rivers.

LOCAL WOMAN IS FOUND DEAD

Body of Mrs. Lofvander Discovered Hanging By Improvised Rope

The body of Mrs. Anna Lofvander, 63, widow of the late P. N. Lofvander, was discovered hanging in the bedroom of her apartment at 423 Ludington street yesterday morning. Corner Kevill Murphy, who investigated the death, pronounced it a suicide.

The aged widow had not been seen since Saturday, and neighbors became alarmed when she failed to appear yesterday. Police were called by William Meier yesterday morning, after he had attempted to deliver a dozen eggs at Mrs. Lofvander's home for two days in succession and had noted that the doors were locked and shades were drawn.

Officer Raymond VanEnkevort broke in the door and discovered the body, suspended face down over the bed. A rope, improvised from a piece of cloth, held the head above the pillow and was fastened to the top of the bedrail. The coroner estimated that she had been dead since Saturday night or Sunday morning. All doors were locked from the inside.

The body was taken to the Anderson funeral home to be prepared for burial, and relatives were notified of Mrs. Lofvander's death. Two daughters survive, Mrs. Victor Pare of Collingswood, New Jersey, and Freda of Minneapolis. P. N. Lofvander, who died several years ago, operated a bakery in Escanaba for many years.

Pollock Defends Civil Service in Radio Talk

A vigorous defense of civil service was offered by Dr. James K. Pollock, chairman of the former civil service study commission, in a radio address delivered from station WWJ, Detroit, last evening.

J. K. POLLOCK

Dr. Pollock said in part as follows: "At the request of hundreds of friends of civil service throughout the state of Michigan, I am taking this opportunity to clarify the present situation at Lansing. I do this, without regard to persons and parties, for this is too important to be handled on that basis."

"It appears that a great deal of mud has been thrown in the eyes of Michigan citizens with regard to civil service. As John Billings said, 'A lot of people know a lot of things that ain't so.' At the time the act was passed, 16 months ago, I stated that it contained every essential feature for a good civil service system, that it was entirely adequate, and that in the hands of a competent commission and a competent personnel director it should give the state a type of efficient and economical service hitherto unknown. The experience of the past year proves this statement to be correct. The past year was a year of remarkable achievement and results, which show Michigan in civil service matters to be the envy of personnel administrators all over the United States."

Not Election Issue
"Civil service was not an issue in the past election. Both candidates for governor and both parties were on record for maintaining and improving the civil service system. The majority of the members of legislature also had indicated their approval of civil service during the campaign. The overwhelming sentiment of the people, estimated by the Gallup Poll not long ago at 8 per cent, was in favor of the merit principle."

"Unfortunately, the new fledgling, civil service, became the whipping boy in partisan recriminations. Like the Jews in Germany, everything that had gone wrong was to be blamed on Civil Service. One contention, that the act was merely a move to blanket in Murphy Democrats, has been disproved by figures recently released which show that two out of every three of the employees now on the state payroll antedate the Murphy administration. Of course all of these employees passed qualifying examinations, but the figures also show that three thousand of the state employees secured their positions through open competitive examinations since the coming into effect of Civil Service. The proposal now to put the state to the expense of giving open competitive examinations would merely lead to confusion as unnecessary, as an unjustifiable expense and would seriously interrupt the continuity of state service. It is interesting, of course, that some critics of civil service now have so much faith in the examining process that they want to give examinations over again to everybody."

Answers Criticisms
"Word is now being passed around that there are not enough exempt positions; that it is non-sense to examine laborers and janitors, and that employees under Civil Service are not loyal to their jobs. Make no mistake about these plausible attacks. If janitors are not under Civil Service, they will be under a patronage system, and of course this is the real reason why the present move is being made to exempt thousands of employees from Civil Service. It isn't to give the state better employees. Adding employees to the payroll, especially inexperienced political appointees will not conduce either to efficiency or economy. If any employee is not loyal to his chief in the execution of the policy laid down by that chief, the law has adequate grounds for removal. A job does not need to be made a spoils job just to make the employee loyal

2 AMENDMENTS ARE PROPOSED

Changes in Constitution of State On Ballot for April 3

Two amendments to the state constitution will be voted on at the polls on April 3, when Delta county voters will ballot for a county school commissioner, two state supreme court justices, two regents of the state university, a superintendent of public instruction, a member of the state board of education and two members of the state board of agriculture.

One amendment for non-partisan election by the people of justices of the supreme court, circuit court judges, judges of probate and circuit court commissioners. The second would provide for the vesting of circuit court commissioners with judicial powers such as are now exercised by justices of the peace.

Democratic, Republican, Socialist and Commonwealth parties will have stakes of candidates on the ballot for state offices on April 3. Local interest in the election centers on the race for the office of county school commissioner.

Wallace Cameron, Rapid River superintendent of schools, will oppose C. P. Titus, of Gladstone, Democratic incumbent. Party leaders predict a comparatively heavy vote this year in the spring election, in which the poll is normally light.

Yachtsmen Invited To Escanaba Club's Banquet Thursday

DRIVER OF BUS DIES AT WHEEL

Faithorn Students Saved As Youth Takes Over Controls

Menominee.—W. Leonard Riley, 49, driver of the Faithorn school bus, died at the wheel of his moving machine while taking students home from a Stephenson basketball tournament at 1 a. m. Sunday.

Theodore Thompson, of Faithorn, student at Stephenson high school and one of the passengers on the bus, saw Mr. Riley slump over the wheel and relax control of the bus. The youth jumped to the controls, held the wheel steady, turned off the ignition and stopped the bus safely. In it were seven other students besides himself. Among them were Edna Riley, 15-year-old daughter of Leonard Riley and a witness of his death.

Student Driver Bus
The other student-passengers on the bus were Sorre Holle, Robert Nelson, Edith Garch, Gladys Carlson, Arlene Hynek and Jeanne Young all of Faithorn.

The students removed the body of Mr. Riley from the driver's seat and Theodore Thompson drove the machine into the village, where he summoned help and notified Mr. Riley's family of his death.

The bus left Stephenson, where its load of 35 students had attended the district basketball tournament, about midnight. In the Faithorn district Mr. Riley began dropping off his charges at their homes. Only eight remained in the bus when he was struck by a heart attack on a township road one mile west of Faithorn. He died instantly, said Coroner Albert Larson, who investigated the death.
