Margaret Yelland, Bradford Simmons Wedding In East

Of outstanding social importance among weddings of early spring is that of Miss Margaret Yelland, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Judd Yelland of this city, and Bradford Simmons, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Simmons, of Baltimore, Maryland.

The ceremony, the culmination of a Yale Medical school romance, took place Friday morning, at St. Paul's church, in New Haven, Connecticut, before a limited number of guests.

Mr. Simmons, a member of one of the most socially prominent families in the east, was graduated from Harvard in 1934. During his senior year, he was captain of the Harvard crew and while at Harvard he also was a member of the Hasty Pudding Institute and the Owl club.

Blonde Jean Ulmer, Homecoming Queen, and brunette Marjory Dunfee, campus leader, recently conducted a session on date behavior in which they told several hundred young men what's what.

Mrs. Ruth Gessner Gives Delightful Concert At School

More than 900 students and members of the public school faculty thoroughly enjoyed a fine piano recital presented at the William W. Oliver Memorial Auditorium last night by Ruth Gessner, Escanaba's accomplished pianist.

Mrs. Gessner, who gained her musical background in Germany and who appeared several times as guest soloist with the Berlin Symphony orchestra before coming to the United States, prepared a well diversified program which proved a delightful treat to students and faculty alike.

The program opened with the familiar and descriptive Spinning Song by Mendelssohn and was followed by Yon Weber's concert waltz, Invitation to Dance, a number ordinarily played by full orchestra but which was originally written for piano.

Chopin's contribution to the concert included the sprightly Scherzo in B Flat, the melodious Nocturne in E Flat Major and the Nocturne in G Flat Major. This series of selections of the romantic school found warm favor with the audience, especially in the case of Chopin's numbers.

Throughout the concert, the artist was enthusiastically applauded by the audience, many of whom were students who were attending their first concert. She responded with several encores, including Chopin's Minute Waltz, Soaring by Robert Schumann and the quaint, descriptive Music Box by Leclair.

Like and don't like? The truth is, college men can and do speak for themselves. They don't have to make wisecracks. Their method is much more to the point. If the girl suits they say, "How about a date Saturday night?" If she doesn't they say, "Well, I'll be seeing you."

Miss Miller Is Soloist, Monroe Symphony Concert

Miss Elizabeth Miller, of Monroe, Mich., daughter of Attorney and Mrs. William J. Miller, was soprano soloist in the concert presented Sunday afternoon, March 26, by the Monroe Symphony orchestra.

Mrs. Miller, who has been heard in numerous programs here and whose talent is familiar to music lovers here and in neighboring cities, sang three numbers, "Vissi d'Arte, Vissi d'Amore," from "Tosca," Puccini; "Du bist die Ruh," Schubert; and "Hills," La Forge. Her accompanist was Miss Doris Eber.

The Monroe Symphony orchestra played its second concert of the season, yesterday afternoon in the high school auditorium, before an audience of approximately 800 persons. Two soloists appeared on the program, Miss Marian Karch, harpist, and Miss Elizabeth Miller, lyric soprano.

On The RECORD

By Dorothy Thompson

ON PARTY MATERIAL
My esteemed colleague Mr. Louis Sobol, of "The New York Journal and American," has been conducting his own Gallup poll on party-for-twenty. He has asked his readers to tell him who they would like to have at a party if they knew everybody and could invite any one they liked.

Dorothy Thompson

The party turns out to be terrible. It includes the following persons: Heddy Lamarr, Dorothy Lamour, M. M. Chiang Kai-shek, Helen Hayes, Clara Boothe, Luce, Dorothy Parker, Anne Morrow Lindbergh, Eleanor Roosevelt, Dorothy Thompson, Elsa Maxwell, Thomas Dewey, J. Edgar Hoover, Anthony Eden, Orson Welles, W. C. Fields, Don Ameche, Bing Crosby, Noel Coward, Jimmie Durante and Winthrop Rockefeller.

These are the favorites, although a lot of other people got scattering votes. Among the runners up were Hitler, Stalin, Mussolini, Chamberlain and Ghandi. A party including some of these understudies would really be wonderful. I would give a year of my life to listen to a conversation between Ghandi and Mussolini, or Ghandi and Hitler.

But as for Mr. Chamberlain, I don't really think he would be an asset at any party. I would much rather have his brother-in-law, were the brother-in-law still alive. (And while we are still on the subject, I think the brother-in-law would have been an admirable Prime Minister for Great Britain at this time. He is the gentleman who once put on an admiral's uniform and reviewed the British fleet. He also once roped off Piccadilly Circus and started digging it up. He held up the traffic for days, until it was finally discovered that there was no reason for digging up Piccadilly Circus. I am convinced he is the man that Great Britain should have sent to Munich. He had imagination and no sense of the limits of possibility.)

But to get back to this party. I do not know Miss Lamarr or Miss Lamour, but they are beautiful, and beauty is a help at any party. I have often observed that the gaze of a pair of beautiful eyes adds brilliance to any man's tongue, whether the lady is really following his conversation or not. If she just looks as though she were it is sufficient.

Mme. Chiang Kai-shek I don't know, but I greatly fear that she would use the occasion to raise a relief fund. That sometimes happens at parties nowadays and is a very dreary business. I would O. K. Helen Hayes. She is charming, intelligent, warm and that very rare thing, a marvelous listener.

Bing Crosby would not get to my party, from what I know of him at long distance. W. C. Fields was a good idea. Mr. Ameche I don't know.

If there is going to be an Englishman, I can think of many more amusing people than Anthony Eden—Harold Nicolson, for instance, or Vernon Bartlett. Anthony Eden looks wonderful, but he wears English shyness as the badge of his caste and it's extremely difficult for him to discard it. Anne Lindbergh is another shy person, whose very listening is remote.

Orson Welles is perpetually wrapped in the mantle of his own destiny. And as for Dorothy Thompson, she is terrible. She always talks politics and has a horrible habit of holding forth. Given the slightest opportunity, she makes a speech, and nothing that she says to herself in the cab on the way home seems to cure her.

In fact, on this whole list there are only three persons who are first-class party material, whatever their other virtues may be. They are W. C. Fields, Noel Coward and Clara Boothe. Luce.

Dorothy Parker used to be first class. But she has recently gotten religion and is now full of social significance, which does not sit upon her lightly. She was always full of the palm of it all, but it used to be her own particular, peculiar and individual pain, mixed with the most mordant wit and the most irresistible self-mockery. She was never the first to speak, nor the second to speak, but usually the last to speak, and the next day the only one to be remembered.

Now, if I were having a party of twenty and my object was not to invite, necessarily, the people I admire most, or think to be the profoundest thinkers, or the noblest souls, but to pick the best imaginable party material, I would have quite a different list. I would put Clara Boothe Luce first among the women. She is very beautiful. She is exquisitely dressed. She is really adult. She can discuss politics, letters, fashion, the stage and sports with equal vivacity and knowledgeability. She knows all the gossip—which is always a help at a party—but is sufficiently discreet and seldom really malicious. She is a delightful conversationalist, quick to pick up an idea, give it a new twist and toss it back to the sender. She never holds forth. If she has convictions, she

SERIAL STORY 'MRS. DOC' BY TOM HORNER

Copyright, 1939, NEA Service, Inc.

The characters and situations in this story are wholly fictional.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
ALAN WARREN—Ambitious young country doctor.
EMILY WARREN—Alan's wife.
ERIC KANE—Construction engineer.
DR. FARRELL—Alan's elderly associate.

Yesterday, Thinking Emily loves Eric, Alan tells her to go with Eric, leaves the house, tells them not to be there when he returns. Emily cries after him. "He's gone—my Alan!"

CHAPTER XXI
"He's gone. . . He's gone. . . Emily repeated through her tears.

Eric took her in his arms, drew her gently from the doorway. Awkwardly, his bandaged hand caressed her, as she wept, her face against his shoulder.

"He's doing it the way he wanted. He wants you to be happy. That's all that matters," Eric said. "How can I ever be happy . . . ?" Emily wailed.

"Now, now," Eric's voice was soothing. "I'll do my best. If you'll let me. . . Come now, we haven't much time. Pack a few things. The girl can send the rest—I'll get your ticket."

"But Eric, I'm not going with you. I don't love you. I never will." Emily's eyes, red and filled with tears looked up at him as she pushed him away from her. "I love Alan. I can't leave him. I'm staying here—even if he doesn't want me!"

"But Emily, you said . . . your wanting a divorce. You even said you'd marry me!"

"That was a long time ago, Eric. Before I grew up. I'm not a little girl any longer. I'm a doctor's wife. I've work to do here in Summer—with Alan."

"The night you went to the dam . . . when I stood there on the dock, hoping, praying you'd get through safely, I knew that Alan's life is my life. Without him, there is nothing for me."

"But this sudden change, Emily. . . Are you sure you won't change your mind again?"

Emily's abrupt decision had left Eric non-plussed. To be plunged from the heights of happiness into a depth of defeat was something he keeps them to herself. My second choice is Alice Roosevelt Longworth, because, like Mrs. Luce, she has an enormous range of interests, a beautiful speaking voice—her discrimination about vowels is exquisite. She always manages to look as though she had thrown on last year's clothes at the last minute, and still remains distinguished. She has wit, spiced with malice and warmed by humor, and she is one of the finest listeners I have ever met. She listens with her whole personality, and she makes everybody feel that he is much more brilliant than he is. In the elation of that feeling he sometimes really is more brilliant than he is.

I would have Beatrice Lillie, because she looks wonderful and because, on the stage or off, she is always Beatrice Lillie, and the funniest woman alive. She is an irresistible combination of gamin and grande dame. She is my candidate for Queen of any country anywhere, with a moratorium on conditions, situations and reactions for the period of her reign.

Mrs. Franklin P. Adams is marvelous party material. She looks like a ripe peach, she is an inveterate liker of everybody and always has a good time.

I'd keep Helen Hayes, for reasons already mentioned; I'd ask Neysa MacMein, because she is a great good scout and men adore her. I'd ask Katherine Hepburn, because of a modest earnestness in the midst of so much good looks. Mrs. Ogden Mills Reid would be a perfect guest; she knows about everything and never reveals it unless pressed to do so. She never thinks about herself, but she does notice everybody else in the room, and invariably drifts toward any person who may for a moment be feeling uncomfortable.

The concert pianist Anis Dorfman can come to any party I ever give. She is feminine, warm, appreciative, and that rarest of all things, a concert pianist who really likes to play the piano, if she likes the party. She plays like an angel and she always plays the right thing at the right moment, and you can get her away from the piano, too, when conversation picks up again after a charming interlude. And, finally, there is Eve Curie, now visiting in this country, the daughter of the great Madame Curie, and a young woman who has everything.

Now, for men: Noel Coward, by all means, for his wit, his vivacity, and his enormous intelligence on all sorts of subjects, including things most remote from the stage.

You can keep all the Senators, politicians, Presidents past, Presidents present and Presidents future, but for a party give me Kip Fadiman—Clifton Fadiman, if you please—a man who makes a large part of his living by public speaking and never makes a public speech.

I'll exchange Jimmie Durante for Walter Duranty, full of gossip, oddities, information, history—ancient and contemporary—a natural vivar and a superb story teller.

I'd ask Henry Mencken if he would come to a party of twenty, which I doubt. His rubicund countenance, resembling some-could not take lightly. His hands ached, but his heart hurt more.

"There is no sudden change," Eric. This is the way it has always been—this is the way it will always be. When I said I'd divorce Alan and marry you I was angry—infuriated by his stubborn devotion to something I did not understand. I know now, I can't explain it, but when I saw Alan and these other doctors taking their lives in their hands to reach injured men, braving death on that flooded river, I realized that medicine is an almost holy profession. These doctors are not afraid of anything. When a patient calls they go—regardless of what the cost may be.

"I see it now. That's why I'm staying with Alan. I'm sorry if I hurt you, Eric."

Eric took it, smiling. It was too much to hope for, he realized, even to dream that Emily could love him. He had been fooled, for a moment, just as Alan had been. Emily's kiss, her solicitude for his burned hands had been only pity—not love. Her love belonged to Alan. Nothing would ever change that. She had come into his life a second time, Eric thought with bitterness, and she would dance out of it again as she had on that first night, leaving him only memories.

Alan had said she should make the choice. She had. And Eric found no part in it. He tried to tell himself that he was glad—for Alan. That it should be like this Alan and Emily.

Alan did not look back as he hurried down the street. People passed him, spoke to him, but he neither saw nor heard them. Others stared wonderingly at him, bare-headed, his face pale and drawn, as he walked along as if in a daze.

His thoughts kept pace with his steps. Eric and Emily. They would go away together. They would be gone from the house before he returned. He would never see either of them again. That was best. He could never bring himself to seeing Emily as another man's wife. His Emily.

He made his way across town, heedless of traffic lights and automobiles. The river drew him as if a magnet. At last he found himself in Summer's little riverside park, sitting on the bank, watching the quiet water. A weaker man might have seen escape in the rippling waves, but he thought did not occur to Alan.

For a long time he sat there, staring dully before him, seeing nothing. Gradually the numbness he had felt began to leave him.

With Emily gone out of his life, only his work remained. He would make that take all of his time, day and night. That free maternity clinic he and Farrell had planned to start—he would begin work on that right now.

He would sell his home, he could never live there without Emily—move in with Farrell. He would move his office into the poorer section of town, across the tracks. Then work—work—work. He would forget money—never worry about collections. Farrell had plenty to keep them both.

But even the thought of his clinic held little joy for him. Without Emily to work for, even medicine held little promise of ever bringing him true happiness.

Maybe Farrell would know the right answer. Slowly, calm and collected now, Alan left the river and walked toward Farrell's home.

"Do you think Alan will ever forgive me?" Will he ever understand?" Emily was saying.

"Of course he will," Eric reassured her. "He was only trying to give you what he thought you wanted. To set you free, without hate or bitterness. It was you he was thinking of, not himself."

They stood at the door, waiting for the cab that was to take Eric away.

"I've been such a fool, Eric. I didn't know what I wanted. I thought it was parties and fun. But it wasn't. I want Alan. And if his profession takes him from me most of the time, I'll be content with the few minutes I can be with him. Dr. Farrell was right. I want to be—just as he said—a doctor's wife."

"You'll be the best. You'll find your happiness here, helping Alan." The taxicab's horn sounded from the curb.

"This is goodbye, Emily," Eric said. "You'll realize, some day, that all of this was for the best. It hasn't been easy, and it won't be easy, even now, but eventually we'll all know that it was better to have things end this way."

"I love you to Alan again. I lost the first time, and now—He's a grand fellow, Emily. Be happy with him. . . Goodbye!" He turned abruptly from her, hurried down the walk.

"Goodbye, Eric!" Emily called after him. At the door of the cab he turned, waved his bandaged hand. The door closed behind him, the cab sped away. As it turned the corner, Emily could see Eric's face, through the window, still smiling at her.

"Mrs. Doc! Mrs. Doc!" The man's shout stopped her as she started to close the door. She came out on the porch, saw a poorly dressed youth, wild-eyed, and pale, running toward her.

"What is it? What do you want?" she asked.

He was beside her, panting.

"My wife! My wife!" he yelled in her ear. "Where's Doc? Tell him to come! My wife's dying. He won't let her die! Don't let her die!"
