Margaret McPheeters, Nutrition Expert, Dies

Miss Margaret McPheeters, 62, former nutrition specialist for the University of Maryland extension service, died last night in Stillwater, Okla.

Miss McPheeters resigned last December because of ill health and returned to Oklahoma, her native State.

Miss McPheeters had been on the extension service staff since 1926, first as home demonstration agent, then as nutrition specialist. She was known to housewives throughout the State for her jovial disposition and eagerness to help with home problems.

She was graduated from Oklahoma A. and M. College and took her master's degree from Iowa A. and M. College. Later she took post graduate courses at the University of Chicago and Columbia University.

Before coming to College Park she taught in California and Michigan.
