VOLUME XXXII. NEGAUNEE, (L. S.,) MICHIGAN, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1904. NUMBER 5.

Odd Fellows' Home.

The September number of "Fraternity" contains a brief history of the Michigan Odd Fellows' Home at Jackson, Mich., and also presents a number of photo engravings of the buildings and scenes in the beautiful park which surrounds the home. The dedication of the home on August 9 was the culmination of a project which has been long cherished by Michigan Odd Fellows and now that the enterprise is fairly under way there is every indication that adequate provision has been made for the care and shelter of the widow and orphan or the aged brother and his wife. The acquisition of the property and its selection to present needs represents a considerable outlay, but Michigan Odd Fellows will never have occasion to regret the investment.

The home is located on the west limits of Jackson, Mich., a broad driveway from the city ensuing at the northeast gate of the home park and the line of the Jackson & Battle Creek Traction Railway touching the southern boundary of the park. The property consists of 82½ acres of land, 36 acres of which is devoted to farm, orchard and garden purposes. The remainder of the tract being designated as Wildwood Park and including the site of the group of buildings which now constitutes Odd Fellows' Home. The original owner of the property expended over $50,000 during his lifetime in the improvement of the grounds. Artesian wells furnish a never-failing supply of pure water and there is a complete system of drainage. The main building is a fifteen-room house, of brick and stone and erected at a cost of $20,000. The grounds of the park are broken by hill and dale, covered with a forest of stately oak, which nature has planted with a lavish hand, while the lawns and garden lands are gently rolling and carry a very rich and productive soil.

All things considered, it is doubtful whether a more advantageous site could be found in the whole state. The title to the property is vested in the grand lodge, and the negotiations for its purchase were conducted last April. The price of the tract, including all improvements, was $25,000, but Messrs. Field and Lewis, of Jackson, the sellers, each contributed $500 to the Odd Fellows' making the net cost to the order $24,000. The home is under the management of the board of control, four members of which are elected by the grand lodge, 1, 2, 3, and 4, and five members by the Rebekah Assembly. One of the members of the board of control is H. G. Jackson, of Negaunee, Mich., and despite the long distance which has separated him from his fellow members he has managed to take an active part in the negotiations which led to the acquisition of the home for Michigan Odd Fellows.

Merchants Enjoyed Trip.

Thirty-five members of the Retail Merchants' Association of this city enjoyed the hospitality of a similar organization in Marquette last Friday night, and there is little doubt that the mutual acquaintance formed will result in an occasional interchange of visits.

The Negaunee merchants left here in a special car on the 7:10 train and upon arrival at Marquette were met by a committee representing the local business men of that city. The visitors were first taken to the new library, and though they had heard more or less concerning it little can one who has not personally surprised at the extent of the collection and the manner in which it had been housed. Thence the party was taken to the Marquette Club and entertained in the most hospitable manner. Informality was the key note to the success of the gathering, for the visitors readily accepted the invitation to make themselves at home in the luxurious clubrooms, and games of various kinds and a constant flow of conversation as old friends met or strangers became acquainted made the hours pass quickly and pleasantly. Refreshments and cigars had been provided in abundance in the course of the evening a substantial lunch was served. The party were most heartily welcomed by the president of the Marquette association, and John Sloss, at the head of the Negaunee association, made a response expressing the visitors' appreciation of the hospitality.

At the next meeting of the Negaunee association arrangements will be perfected for extending an invitation to the Marquette merchants to pay a visit to this city.

To Rout "General Apathy."

Pursuant to a call issued by the Republican city committee, a well attended meeting was held in No. 1 house house Monday night to discuss the campaign and devise plans for getting out a full vote on election day. In leading the call the committee very properly said that the only danger which confronted the national, state and county tickets was that of the unintended carelessness the rank and file of the party have in the election day. It is well known and a matter of no consequence that many might not take the trouble to vote.

To offset the effect of this apathy it was decided to have the aldermen of the several wards act as committees in their respective wards with a view to getting a full attendance at election and a full vote. These committees were empowered to add to their number through love that evening to Gogebic, night be willing to assist in the work. Another act the meeting relative to the increasing of the registration and vote, the work may be commenced prior to election, and will eventually deserve lack of specific interest. Negaunee people have taken considerable interest of the total number of electors which are located here, and the result is a corresponding increase of municipality on county considerations. In electors will be left in many matters where representation or appointment is based upon the city's voting strength. It is in the hope that the total vote may be brought up to the figure warranted by the city's population, and the municipality from the benefits that accrue from increased voting strength. The fact that effort to locate the electors, by the municipality from the benefits that accrue from increased voting strength.

There is the story of ultimate moral efficiency. You have to be the biggest and most powerful guns in the world. That means, of course, that you must have battle ships big enough and strong enough to carry such guns. To have such guns you must have gunners practicing and shooting at the target in time of peace until they can "hit the gold" 9 miles away, and then you will know that in case of war, in such time comes, they will send their hits home to the vitals of the enemy's ships, as our men did at Santiago and as the British did in the attack and in the Yellow Sea.

The birth is an important political event in the midst of one of the most critical and disheartening periods in the history of his people. Had they grown up without a brother, they would have had no claim to their Tsar or Mother as their father's successor. Now little Czarevitch is a double Alexis, and if he survives the illness, will be the second Czar of that name. The first was the founder of the house of Romanoff and father of Peter the Great. The coming of a royal son at this distressing moment is hailed by the Russian people as an omen of better times. All the world hopes that the young prince may live to be a powerful and enlightened emperor. The father, Nicholas, will be succeed by either European monarchs who have so made love in dinner as I went the Emperor of Austria, King Leopold of Belgium, King Carol of Roumania and Queen Wilhelmina of Holland.

Fathers and mothers handle their children in a very different manner. Mothers, in general, rather play with them with endearments and reward them from their affections. Fathers use to be more a power example struggling with the world. There are two schools of opinion, not well defined perhaps, but none the less in existence, about the proper method of training boys. A man late the sleek of hustle in life and developing up and ambitious himself for the hardening process. "Throw the boy into the water," they say, "and let him swim for it; the way to teach one to love hard knocks is by experience, with hard blows, and if he is ever in amount in anything he must fight for his life." The defenders of the hardening process on point to the fact that the over-solicitous parent who follows the child's footsteps endlessly and takes care that the pebbles or bruises does not see sharply blow on him, who stands between him and all responsibility, sees for him and does the thinking for him, finds that the most carefully nurtured and disciplined young man is without the capacity to act alone because some one else has been setting for him, and finds himself to amount to under the weight of responsibility and care when finally he must act for himself. Then there is the sensible who was thrown into the street, aged 4, to battle for fortune and later became a college president; there is the bootblack who is a railroad magnate and owns thanks only in his most heard and quick will; there is the business country boy left practice and prospered in the course of years, who succeeds in winning fame and fortune. These, if not fathers ourselves, are sufficient to be enough to give one the impression that the proper way to become great is to forego all the advantages of home love and learn by doing. They will never learn to be strong if some one else does everything for them. Some strong men have stood the terrible trials of being born rich and of being as weiths and have come out triumphantly, but it is still a rule of character that success of physical strength that it is in power of also and growth, and gain is the sure way of winning as athletic contest is to train for it, and the best training possible for life is some one else.

Heartless Fiddler.

Frank Chesnut, the scene of a singular fiddler of Atlanta who is without heads. Many years ago he was caught in a blizzard and his arms frozen so badly that both hands were amputated at the wrists. For a long time the victim was silent and he seemed that his fiddling days were over. He decided, however, to experiment, and, being a mechanical genius, he made a contrivance of wood and wire by which he would enable him to wield the bow. The lingering was more difficult, but by long practice he has taught the stumps of his left hand to make the necessary skillful movements of the machine and the carrying positions. With the violin held in place by his chin and screw and with the help of his fingerless wrist, Chesnut manages to play his old time selections with nearly as much skill as he formerly did.

Card Anatomy.

This story is told of a resident of a London suburb. As he was waiting for a train the railway official whom he knew to be a resident of the train drew up, and the only second class carriage was already full. He summoned the guard and ordered him to turn out a first class ticket holder, so he was sure that some one in the carriage had only a third-class ticket. Accosted by his manager, the guard meekly obeyed, and, sure enough, one passenger was found in the suggested plight and promptly turned out. He was taken by the arbitrary one, who remarked quietly to the rest of the carriage, as the train resumed one of the stations:

"I was very sorry to turn that gentleman out, especially as I have only a third class ticket myself."

RECITALS OF CAMP AND BATTLE INCIDENTS.

Survivors of the Rebellion Relate Many Amusing and Startling Incidents—Experiences of Men Under Foraging Experiences and Battle Scenes.

Although the resolution by which the flag became a national standard was not officially promulgated by the secretary of congress until Sept. 3, 1777, it seems well authenticated that the regulation stars and stripes were carried at the battle of Brandywine (Sunday, Sept. 11, 1777. This states, says the Philadelphia Record, that the contract entered by Betsy Ross must have been completed before that time, and that the flags had been distributed among the four regiments of which Washington's army was composed. The Delaware regiment was the first subjected to battle at Brandywine Creek, the thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, and the seven uniform white stars were displayed on a blue field.

The flag which was carried by the men in blue and buff during the battle of the Brandywine was probably the one changed until the first day of May, 1795, when in accordance with an act of congress, two additional stripes were added to the flag and fifteen stars to the stars to the union. These additions were made to represent the states of Vermont and Kentucky, which had just been admitted to the Federal union. As no further changes were made in the national flag until 1818, it became the popular opinion that the stars were displayed on a blue field.

As no further changes were made in the national flag until 1818, it became the popular opinion that the stars were displayed on a blue field.

The flag which was carried by the regiments of the Northern army during the battle of Brandywine was the first flag of the states in the union. This was the full constitutional flag of the states in the federal federation, as the United States government had not received the sanction of the constitutional right of a state to secede from the union. The secession of the stars representing the Southern states was regarded as a most severe breach of military etiquette by the brave gentlemen of the Confederate states, and the cause of secession was always rewarded by the authorities of Richmond.

The regimental flags carried by the soldiers of Washington's army during the Spanish war of 1898 displayed the stars and stripes of the flag of the nation, but new States having been added to the union, it became a most great Civil War which so nearly severed the republic. This was also the first struggle in which there was any of the republic country supported in the field together, and it was the first occasion on which former Confederate officers of high rank fought under the uniform of the United States service. The most gorgeous flag which floated over Santiago after the surrender of the city by the Spanish commander measured twenty feet in width by thirty feet in length, the forty-five white stars which formed the union of the field distinctly against the bright blue of the field. —Baltimore American.

Building a Custom Bridge.

The death of Gen. Andrew Hickenlooper, who was in charge of the engineering troubleshooting during the civil war, recalls the fact that at one of these useless enterprises an order was issued to build a bridge. The Boston Transcript retells it in his own inimitable way as the story was first remembered.

"The morning with McPherson, of the Tennessee River I shall never forget. There was no enemy in sight, and the command was in high spirits. Suddenly I was suddenly summoned to headquarters. I was informed that our whole army of thirty thousand men was to cross the river and started after the contraband to buy a flat boat.

"'But, General,' I protested, 'there are no flat boats on the river, and we have enough to carry an empty craft now, and the wagons with the pontoons are left behind.'

"'I don't help that,' said McPherson. 'The bridge must be built, and it must be done on the moment before I cross.'

"I saw that I had my work cut out for me, and I started off.

"In my despair I went down to the river bank and sat down to think. I was busy trying to think out a key to the problem. An order of the engineer corps I knew what was expected of me, and that if I failed my career both in military and civil life was at an end. While I was there, about a half mile, I came upon an old gin filled with negroes. I suppose it must have been from one to three thousand bales. Here was my salvation. Why not build a bridge of the cotton and use the old bounds as a support?

"Twelve of a half-dozen I had a large detail of men on the ground. We took the bales with large ropes, one by one from off our bales each of as it were the river, and bridged them in place by two big cables stretched from one to the other side. The bounds of the gin made a tolerable roadway, and on the level it was an awfully scaly job.

"At 2 o'clock I walked up to General Hickenlooper and reported him out of bed. 'General, the bridge is ready.' I said.

"'Very well, Colonel,' was the answer, and I had a new name. The army rode before bones and soldiers' assembled and the army began to cross.

"I stood the bridge and stood at the edge of the water, expecting it to dissolving to see the cables part under the terrific strain, but it stood every test, and at half past eleven the last wagon had made safe passage, and we had marched on to Chattanooga."

He Calmed by Sunlight.

While the rays of the sun possess a stimulating and beneficial effect the disease and can be used with advantage as a therapeutic agent, yet according to recent investigations, they also may act injuriously and cause disease. That there is a difference in the therapeutic value between the direct rays, or those received at the height of the sunstroke, and the red rays was appreciated by physicians in the former were used in the treatment of such skin diseases as lupus vulgaris, or tuberculosis of the skin, while the latter were found effective in nervous exhaustion.

One of the most recent researches in this department is by Prof. Finsen and is given in a late number of the Archiv fur Hygiene. In these researches a large number of human subjects were exposed to the sun's rays for varying periods, and to a large percentage of cases it was found that there resulted the following set of symptoms: Gydralgia (headache), dizziness of the nasal mucous, scalding eyes (said to be local, peculiar sensations, slight sunburnitis, dry nose or lips, fever, possibly inflammation, insomnia, nervous shock, bilious and vertigo pains. From this list of symptoms manifested in all patients and from the observed existence of certain diseases and malignant malignant conditions Prof. Fernet concludes that exposure to the sun's rays is a predisposing factor in cerpan, lupus vulgaris and epidermic manifestations.—Harper's Weekly.

CAN DRINK TOBACCO

That's One Way to Get It.

Although they won't admit it many people who suffer from sick headaches and other ills get them straight from drinking tobacco. It has been fully proved if they're not afraid to leave it out a year or so in the case of a badly ill habit.

Mrs. Green is a sufferer from sick headaches for twenty-five years and any one who has ever had a bad sick headache knows what it suffered. Sometimes three days in the week I would have to retire to bed, at other times I couldn't lie down the pain would be so great. My life was a hard struggle. If I went away from home for a day I always came back more dead than alive.

"One day I was telling a woman my troubles and she told me she knew that I was probably coffee-soaked. I had sold she had been cured by simplest coffee and using Postum Food Coffee. So I thought I'd try it and see.

"That's how I came to send out and get a package of Postum. I'm glad I did. I've never been without it, for it stops my sick headaches entirely and all of my old troubles. All I did was to follow the directions on the package well made Postum in the place. This change has done me more good than everything else put together.

"I have not taken a bite of drug store for my business bought everything by heard of to help me without doing any good, but when I left off the coffee and my headaches ceased and the other troubles gradually disappeared. I have a friend who had an experience just like mine and Postum cured her just as it did me.

"Postum not only cured the headaches but my general health has been improved and I am much stronger than before. I now enjoy delicious Postum more than I ever did coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason" and it's worth finding out.

Inhale, sweet with fluffing water and wash two or three minutes, when it should be tender, then, soil milk, thicken with a tablespoonful of cornstarch, season to taste with salt a pour and butter. This gives a delicate flavor, and the odor is scarcely perceptible. Onions prepared in this way are healthful, may be creamed or browned in butter or cooking.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS

It will be found a good plan to keep a pair of shoes for heavier coffee, and, in fact all very generally in these days. By this means a mans are kept in better condition for longer with the necessity for replenishing her shoes.

POLITICAL COMMENT

Parker's Letter of Acceptance.

The Hon. Alton B. Parker's letter accepting the Democratic nomination for the Presidency is even more remarkable than his speech to the Notification committee at Esopus last month.

As regards the Democratic past he enters a plea of guilty, with some extenuating circumstances. Concerning the Democratic record, especially during the four years from near March 4, he again lays emphasis upon the fact that the United States Senate is certain to remain Republican and that the House would be unable to undo much mischief harm in four or a Democratic victory next November.

In a nutshell, Judge Parker declares that the gold standard must remain inviolate; that the tariff must not be tinkered with if by such tinkering business conditions are to be disturbed; that in his belief the existing laws for the regulation of trusts are adequate; that the Panama canal must be built, and quickly, along the route selected; that civil service reform must be maintained; that the Monroe doctrine would be upheld; that the Philippines would be given as soon as the natives are reasonably prepared for it; that gradually industrial this seaside, shirt manufacturing town to whom the Democratic house have looked for constructive leadership? And how particularly unsatisfactory a record it seems at the present time!

The Hon. Alton B. Parker's letter is no bugle call. It is as sonorous as aggressive action. It does not "stand and deliver." It does not inspire confidence. Its prevailing note is one of timidity. In a word, it seems to have been written largely to keep the record clear.

The "Party of the Future."

There will be, at the polls in November, something more than a million of young men, who have reached their majority since the fall of 1900, and who will therefore cast their first national vote in November, at the presidential election. This election is the beginning of their political life. How will they vote? Will they cast in their lot with the party of progress, the party that does things; or will they turn their faces from the sunrise and cast their lot with the party which sets as a drag on national progress, which stops among the ruins of the past, and with their face set, with no eyes save those that look backward, pushes on the heights where the Republican party does battle for the life of the gold standard and honest money, eight long years ago, under the inspiring help of the revered McKinley?

The party of the Republican party has always lain in the fact that it is the party of national progress, of development along the natural lines of growth. This has year by year, attracted to it the most generous young voters that element among the young men which embraces the educated and enlightened part. It has been so ever since the Republican party's birth, in 1854. One of the young men then was John Hay, who has been Secretary of State since 1898, —the year of the Spanish war. Back in 1856, he did not reach voting age until 1857 the year before that in which Abraham Lincoln was first elected President. He is a son of the West, for he was born in Salem, Ind. When he started out in his early manhood as a lawyer, Illinois he was one of the things of young men who believed about Abraham Lincoln in his memorable struggle with Stephen A. Douglas for the possession of the United States. He became one of the two private secretaries of Mr. Lincoln during the latter's term as President, and in his subsequent career is an inspiration to all young men of ambition and of high ideals.

Mr. Hay, who is now regarded by all civilized nations as the leading diplomatist of the world, is assured that the young men of the nation shall steer with their face to the path of progress on progress and national glory. In an address to young Americans, he says:

"I want to say a word to the young people assisted; that civil service reform is a living principle and not a dead issue. It is not a thing which Abraham Lincoln would have died for, and which Stephen A. Douglas or the Democratic party of 1860 would have opposed. It is the lawful exercise of the functions of free citizens in the government of a free state.

In what wise does the position of Judge Parker differ from that of the Republican party upon these questions?

As regards the Philippines, he would give them a promise of independence as soon as the natives are reasonably prepared for it." How glibly industrious this sounds, when actually to us whom the Democratic house have looked for constructive leadership! And how particularly unsatisfactory a promise it seems at the present time!

Two Factions.

There are two factions in the Democratic party on the tariff question. Mr. Bailey belongs to the faction which would have the duty for the protection of protection altogether. It was find an important in the existing tion for the levying of a dollar of taxes except for revenue purposes. Mr. Gorman belongs to the faction smaller in number than its rival—which believes in protection as long both constitutional and wise. It would continue the policy under a law and in much the same way as the Republican. The two factions united with Mr. Cleveland in the White House, and they would climb with Judge Parker there.—Washington Star.

How It Might End.

The New Orleans Picayune says: "President Roosevelt's big stick policy is silent to end in a season of peaceful prosperity, not of disaster, in all the great business centers of the country." The Picayune evidently believes that Parker will be elected. Only in that event are we any likelihood that he calmly predicts. Time will be tested. If the country should come to believe in such a possibility there might be a repetition of the experience of 1893, when a prosperous period was brought to a close by the election of Cleveland.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Parker Platform.

While the Judge insists that the Republican Senate would stand in the way of tariff tinkering, he promises that the Democratic, if they have a majority, will do the best they can along that line.—Troy Times.

Popular Science.

At a recent meeting of the Society Club in London Dr. C. E. Gibbs described his new fluid lens designed especially for making photographs with short exposures—in ordinary artificial illumination. It is now being chiefly employed to overcome the difficulty experienced in photographing by artificial light. The fluid lens is composed of two solutions of fluid and chosen with reference to their refractive power, and when in front of photographic objective the light is focused on the sensitive plate in a manner not possible with any other lens. Instantaneous photographs are obtained with single flashes of lightning, and with a lens of this kind in combination, and even a moving object photographed at night, and that without special lighting. It is hoped that flashes of this description will be utilized when the field in photography.

WHAT WILL BE SURRENDERED

An army when contemplating retreat or capitulation first considers what it shall surrender. Let us suppose that the American people on the 8th of next November capitulate to the Democratic party and its leaders, Parker and Davis. What should we have to surrender?

First. If Judge Parker and his supporters were able to carry out their purpose, we should surrender the Philippines and whatever advantage we may not possess by holding those islands in the Pacific.

Second.—We should surrender all relation to the Panama treaty and abandon the undertaking entirely.

Third.—We should surrender our present relation of supremacy on land and industries to the competition of the world, thereby surrendering to home market wealth from twenty to thirty billion dollars a year.

And next we should probably in the near future surrender our honor itself, as the Democratic party is still controlled by the advocates of free silver and a fifty cent dollar.

These are but three or four of the important possession which we should abandon but when the flag is pulled down, when all attempts at future progress and prosperity are abandoned, not one whom honor itself is lost, but who would there be worth retaining? The city would be a gloomy one, indeed, were the success of Mr. Parker and his party at all likely. Happily, however, there is not the least shadow of a possibility that we shall have to surrender our birthright and everything else we possess, providing that the people are not too confident and neglect their opportunity on election day not only to elect a Republican candidate, but to give the Democratic candidate such an overwhelming defeat that the party will surrender it for a generation.

The practical effect of protection is seen in the fact that during the years in which the protective policy has been in continuous operation, the country has grown more prosperously than was ever before experienced in a like period by any nation on the earth. This fact is worth more than all the foreign theories in existence.

Democrats are making the most of Judge Parker's decisive utterance. He has not even thus far of their candidates were bachelors, namely, Van Buren, Buchanan, Tilden and Cleveland.

Four years ago at this time Democratic orators were warning the people that the Nation would go to smash ruin if the gold standard was adopted by a fiat dollar of the government.

Democratic candidates for congress get very long when asked to furnish a list of their party's vital issues which have lasted through more than one campaign.

It may be interesting, if unfortunate, to say just how Democratic candidates for congress. If he favors a reenactment of the Democratic tariff law of 1894

Democrats get like a politician used to say, Dr. Wedeles.

DANGER IN FALLING COLDS

Fall colds are liable to hang on all winter leading the seeds of pneumonia Scott's Emulsion or consumption. Foley's Honey and Tar cures quickly and prevents serious results. VINOL FOR THE AGED.

J. E. O'Donoghue, Cor Well Known Druggist, Feels Sure Vinol Is Nothing Else but a Vinol for the Aged People.

Shell Mr. O'Donoghue at once is a pleasure to receive letters like the following in regard to our Vinol, as they show how thoroughly our claims are to what is still stated:

Mr. Joseph Hankison, of Decatur, Ill., writes: "I am in my 78th year, and for some time I have been feeling weak and suffered with a chronic cold and lung trouble, until I was seriously ill and could not go out of doors. My son sent us some vinol. I commenced to take it and in the sturdy worked wonders for me. I feel better and stronger than for 10 years, and my cough is all gone."

Vinol contains the medicinal curative principles of cod liver oil, without the oil, in a strengthening, healing preparation of cod liver oil. We do not ask a drop of oil or grease to upset the stomach, and no sickening drugs, and for this reason it has remarkable power to cure chronic coughs and colds, build up and invigorate the weak and aged, make rich, red blood, cure stomach troubles and restore the convalescent to perfect health.

"I just wish every aged, run down or debilitated person in Negaunee would try Vinol on our guarantee to return the money paid for it every time it fails." J. E. O'Donoghue, Druggist.

If the American people really want to change from the present conditions to those which prevailed under Mr. Kinley's election in 1896, they know how to get it. Every vote for the Democratic party is a vote for such a change.

Favorable For Wells.

T. M. Wells, Independent candidate for the Legislature, was called to Chicago Wednesday on a business mission that will occupy his time for a day or two, but prior to his departure he expressed himself as being well pleased with the reports that were being received regarding the result of the election favorable to the Independent county ticket. These reports promoted the belief that the fusion movement there was not being misconstrued; that it was understood to be based upon the issue of exceptional conditions, and that a majority of the voters would so register their convictions on Nov. 8, so far as his own candidacy was concerned he said he was willing to rest his appeal to the voters upon his personal and official record and upon his support of principles of good legislation, and he believed the ballot thrown on November 8 would contain an endorsement of his course.

Presents Bills for Extras.

J. D. Saunders, representing the Central Construction Company of Oshkosh, was in the city yesterday to confer with city officials relative to his company's bill for extras in connection with the recent installation of new machinery at the municipal light station. The electric light committee held a session in the afternoon and informed Mr. Saunders as to what the city might be willing to do in the matter. Mr. Saunders will return to the matter before the common officials at Oshkosh and it is deemed likely a satisfactory settlement will be effected.

CLIMATIC CURES.

The influence of climate on condition in the cure of consumption is very much overdrawn. The pure air, sunlight and the rich pollen, too, can do much to relieve, at least temporarily, the cough, bad digestion, and a regular use of German Syrup. Take a teaspoonful in the morning to make certain by German Syrup, so a good night's rest and the absence of that wearing cough and debilitating night sweats. Sixteen nights and the sixteenth day you will be surprised at the strength and power of the consumptive germs. Prevention or stopped by taking German Syrup in time. Only by using Boschee's German Syrup should you be able to go to a warmer climate, you will find that of the thousands of consumptives there, the few who are benefited and regain strength are those who use German Syrup. He has had some carriages and horses on hand and has further augmented the outfit by the purchase of five and rolling stock. The location is not as central as he would like, but he believes that his prices and careful attention to the wants of patrons will bring him business.

Many Attended Rally.

The Republican rally addressed last Saturday evening by Senator Burrows and Congressman Young was really the size political gathering of the campaign, both in attendance and in point of interest aroused. McMillan's Hall was completely filled —even standing room being at a premium. Frank A. Bell presided over the meeting and the Negaunee orchestra band enlivened matters with a few selections. The speakers were given the closest attention and it is certain that their visit was productive of good for the Republican cause.

Episcopal Church Rector.

It has been practically decided that Rev. Mr. Hart, who for some time has been in charge of the Episcopal church in this city. The local board has asked Rev. Mr. Hart to come here, and it is understood that he is favorably disposed, but the assignment does not become effective until after Bishop Williams, who is absent and may not return for a week or two. Services are still in progress at St. John's and it is not likely that the congregation will be ready for use before the first Sunday in December, but if Rev. Mr. Hart can come soon, it might be arranged to hold services in the Presbyterian church during the month of November. Mr. Hart has made a exceedingly favorable impression upon the Negaunee people who have met him and there is little doubt that he will be equally well liked by the congregation. He is an energetic young man, his home having formerly been in Ishpeming where Rev. Father is regular of the Newport alike.

Weak Hearts

Are due to indigestion. Ninety-nine of every one hundred people who have heart trouble do not suspect it—it is not simple indigestion. It is a scientific fact that all cases of heart disease, not organic, are entirely traceable to, but are the direct result of indigestion. All that ails you from the stomach which fails of perfect digestion ferments and spoils the stomach, suffocating it up against the heart. This interferes with the action of the heart, and in the course of time that deflects but vital organ becomes diseased. Kodol Digests What You Eat and relieves the stomach of all nervous strain and the heart of all pressure.

REPUBLIC.

Thought a quiet affair, the McDonald Ericson nuptials last Tuesday evening made a very pretty home wedding. The ceremony was performed at 7 o'clock at the residence of Mr and Mrs. George McDonald, Rev. Mr. Hall of the Methodist Episcopal church officiating. The bride was supported by her sister, Miss Emma McDonald, and the groom, E. Julius Ericson, was supported by his brother, George Ericson. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Mr. Magsley of the M. E. Church. After receiving the congratulations of the guests, who were relatives and intimate friends of the families, Mr. and Mrs. Ericson took the M. Paul railway evening train, with the intention of spending a few weeks at southern points. Upon their return they will reside in the apartments formerly occupied by Dr. Owen. The bride is an attractive young lady who has resided here but a short time, during which time she has made many friends who will join in wishing them happiness.

SWINGING ON THE GATE.

Where the hoop skirts swirls outin through the last summer's day;
I can see the hungry plowboy wading through the billowed corn,
With expectant ear to windward, listening to the dinner horn;
While possessions of necessity, the future air of fate,
I make wondrous childish journeys as I swing upon the gate.

Strange how back among the many recollections of the past
Memory will present me, and how it brings to me at last
Some poet, foolish, fond remembrance, wending lonely worth the while.
Yet sometime made wondrous happy, as I swung, seeing mile,
Flowing, gone, and soon forgotten—yet remembered by and by
With a seeling in the bosom and a dimming of the eye.

Now my temples feel are greying and my eyes have sober grown
With the years of varied happiness and sorrow I have known;
Still I sometimes hear the echo, when the evening lights are low,
And without my darkened doorway gently breeze seem blow,
Of the friendly, rusty rattle of the latchet as when late
In the lazy, lazy summer time a-swing upon the gate.

—Lowell Otus Reese, in Leslie's Weekly.

HE ASKED HER FIRST.

SHE must marry somebody," said her mother.

"I don't see why she shouldn't refuse them both, if she wants to," said her father.

The girl presented with her heroic-feet rebuke. She had outlined with the quietness of her excellent parents on the subject of her matrimonial future for several weeks. Indeed, they were much more disinterested in them than she was herself. Being pretty, a little spoilt, charmingly healthy, and essentially feminine, she was in a delightful state of indecision.

Jack was everything that an ideal lover should be—emotionally good-looking, absolutely devoted to her, a dancer at all games, and entirely lacking the most elementary notion of financial prudence.

Vesey, in his own peculiar way, was almost as suitable. If he wasn't handsome, he was the best dressed man in Jarlow Park, which is saying a good deal; he played no game, except "bridge," which he had resolved to give up for ever; and his financial condition was literally affluent.

Jack appealed to the romantic side of her character, and his proposal was very like father; Monty appealed to her prudence, and to the support of her mother.

"You will have to make up your mind definitely," said her mother.

"I am afraid I can't, mother," said the girl, keeping herself in hand resolutely, "it is so tiresome."

"If I were a girl, I shouldn't hesitate five minutes," said her father, meaning Jack.

"No more should I," said her mother, meaning Monty.

"I think I shall accept the one who asks first," said the girl, bursting in her cup for a second edition of cod liver.

"Don't be wicked," said her mother.

"Not a bad notion," remarked her father, reflecting that he could write to Jack, and give him a hint.

"You don't mean what you say," said her mother thoughtfully.

Of course, she didn't mean it, but having said it, she began to think that she did. "Well," she said, "I don't suppose I must be a duffer, but I don't know my own mind a bit. Monty represents a certain and fixed income, and I really think I should look rather well in time. And—dropped eyelids, always, you know, just real fees."

Her mother looked approval. "You are a girl who wants to be well governed," she said.

"Nothing at all. I don't quite know," she said. "I think he represents everything that's jolly except the car and the yacht. That's what he is not governing. If I could only take a bit the bit of each, I would be all right. I don't feel a scrap like a girl always does in books. I simply don't know what I want, and I shall accept the one who asks me first, because I hate them both very much and I have got to fill up all right."

Her parents shook their heads at her self-contradictions, forgetful that if they had not been so urgent, the girl would have been able to make up her mind without assistance.

"Shocking," said Mr. Bush, and he made up his mind to send off a wire to his favourite on sum as he reached the city. "Jack ought to be here this morning, and get it over," he reflected. "It's only a kindness to let me know here from that week."

Mrs. Bush pressed on her honour as soon as he had left the house, and adopted another of the ancient telegraphic offices. "I must give Monty a hint," she said. "Margaret will thank me some day for saving her from hasty errors."

Happily ignorant of the steps her parents had taken, Margaret sat about her little round of household duties. At 11 o'clock Mr. Winterbed came to take the piano. He had a weakness for the dazzling room piano, since a quarter, her fifteen years, and the little old man, with his red pocket handkerchief and black bag, was a particular favourite of Margaret's. Her mother, having learned on the telephone that the glittering Monty would arrive soon after 12, was anxious to send the old fellow away, but Margaret wouldn't hear of it.

"You know somebody calls," said the elder lady, not daring to tell the truth.

"Nobody is at all likely to call," said the girl lightly.

So Mr. Winterbed proceeded to his irritating task, tapping note after note in a vain attempt to adjust an instrument on which a certain healthy young lady delighted to play sonatas upon full the loud pedal down.

Margaret sat by his side. "It gets worse, and worse," said the old man, sadly. "None of the notes in the bass are almost dumb."

At that moment Mrs. Bush entered the room with an expansive smile of triumph on her face. "Monty has sailed, and would be with you particularly," she said.

"Why, my dear, nothing but the usual," said her mother, with a short look at her reckless words at the breakfast table, and her heart beat more.

"If you are a wise girl you will seize the chance," said her mother; then she added plainly, "for I don't what is presently you. I think you said you wouldn't mind, and he accept the one he you first."

The girl sighed, and swept rather angrily out of the room. It was really too bad to have one's words made use of like that. She didn't want to accept any one just now. Whatever meant of a man proposing before lunch?

She found the glittering youth in the library. His attire was as usually perfect as the most expensive tailor could make it, but, in fact, he looked as if he was nervous.

"What a funny time to call," said the young lady rather rudely, but she felt it, in fact, a little nervous. "I thought you were busy in the city at this time in the morning."

"So I am as a rule," he said with a somewhat vapid smile. "But I had a telephone message to—to—"

"Of course, it's an early nice of you to look in," she said hastily. "You didn't come to the concert last night?"

"No," he stammered. "The fact is I understood that you—you were going with some one else."

The young lady frowned. It was really a very poor point. Jack was going back to take her and he had not turned up. So that also she had refused to go with her parents. Monty had moreover, actually seated one, and her mind rushed to the fact.

"I wanted to ask you something," he began.

"It just going shopping," she said with sudden irritation. "I always put off jobs to you like, and then you can ask me when I am shop." With that fine logic of feminine she was trying to postpone the evil moment, for she had no inkling feeling that she would have to keep her word, and accept him. If he succeeded in asking her the question.

"I want to know, if ——" he began desperately.

"What about umbrellas?" she asked, wickedly. "Is it likely to rain?"

"I don't think, so," he said. "The question I was going ——"

"Of course, you you were going to ask me a question," she said, desperately. "Now, isn't it funny? Whenever people ask me questions I always give the wrong answer."

Her eyes were sparkling with excitement. She had instinctively made up her mind that if he succeeded in proposing, and forced her to give an answer, it should be 'no.' She had even decided that she didn't want to say 'no,' but that didn't quite know why she objected. So she was forcing him to the jilt, and wondered why Jack didn't appear. Then, as she looked down the piano, or indeed anything happen to save her from her own absolute folly.

Without giving him a chance to say a word, she continued on. And all the time she was chattering she was trying to remember how to extricate herself from the horrible position she had got into. Margaret was almost frightened at herself. She had realized that she was going to refuse him, and yet she loved him. She was still conscious that she loved him, and that she was going to refuse him. She was still conscious that she loved him, and that she was going to refuse him. She was still conscious that she loved him, and that she was going to refuse

Stores Cannons.

The storm cannons now in use along the southern side of the Alps, where damage from hailstorms during harvest time is imminent, look like a huge megaphone, such as bank-crew coolers use, and they are set, with their wide mouths raging skyward, beside little houses that look like sentry boxes. When they are fired they boom like "more enough" cannons, and send reverberating, echoing boom-waves careening about among the hillsides; but instead of a blast of shrill, or other appetite projectile, they emit a ring of smoke which grows larger and larger as it ascends, until at last, before it breaks, it is big enough to surround a two-acre field. What the effect of a smoke ring upon a storm-cloud is the test cloud is I cannot exactly say, but instead of hail, only rain falls when the guns are used, and damage to crops is prevented.

THE HOLLY TREE WIGHT.

There was a little goblin boy
Who loved to play a holly-tree;
He laughed and romped night and day,
And made him tree a jolly tree.

The goblin never went to bed,
But when he wished to done a bit
He set his nests above his head
And let his eyelids close a bit.

His food was berries, nuts, and so de;
His table-cloth was made of moss;
And for his drink he sipped the beads
Of night-dew from a blade of grass.

This merry sight began to thrive
For cheeks began to go at sit;
But shortly he is yet alive
I really do not know at all!

NATURE'S MASTER FORESTER.

The famous sequoia, of California, has been termed by John Muir, the master forester of nature. About 30 per cent of the cones of the big trees are eaten and stored away by him.

Having a sum for the first time he appreciates until within a few feet, when he runs up and down the stalks in a sudden rush, all teeth and eyes, as he is sure to open up. Finding that the nuts is not afraid, he beats a retreat, but a few feet when he returns. Gathering continue, he overturns down cones, and hastens off. Now down, now up, he goes in jerky movements, and with quick and self-commanding poor admiration. Then he settles in a branch, and, beating time with his tail, he says, "cheerig! cheerup!"

WRITING YOUR COMPOSITIONS.

Would-be tales begin with letters on separate slips of paper or such like, and then arrange and lengthen. This plan has two advantages: it enables you to see the whole construction together by putting similar notes on the same slip, and it helps you to come to the writing, you may change about your notes until you have got rid of the bad ones under the your composition. This plan was recommended by Edward Eggleston, after he had learned that it was easy to be lost in using it. Let the slips you buy the cards, as a small pad will save you many pennies. The best thing to save as you fill them or finishes one part of your work. Let the slips also be small or you will put too much on each—Prize "Books and Authors," in St. Nicholas.

LIKE TO PLAY RIDE AND SEEK.

Did you know that many animals like to play games? Did you know that boys and girls do? You have all seen the monkeys at the Zoo and how they torment and chase one another, but you have also seen the little birds and animals like the baldeer and weasel like at the farm.

A well-known German named Breehm has had a pet badger and a dog was used to have great sport together. "They used to have a series of mock battles, which I used to entertain the every pleasant afternoon, and their forehanded friends came for and near to witness the performance. The game was that the badger, rooting and skulking his head like a wild boar, would charge upon the dog and strike him in the side with his head; the dog, leaping dexterously entirely over the badger, awaited a second and third attack, and then made the badger chase him all around the garden. Sometimes the badger, tired of being the dog's hind quarters they would have an angry tussle, but never a real fight."

GAMES THE WORLD OVER.

Do you know that in Japan there are no bicycle people? The peaceful scene of messenger and music are left to the little. If the child person has an errand or message is adjusted, with the result that the kind people become not only very skilful, but self-supporting.

Who you know that red is worn only by children under sixteen years of age in Japan? Don't you find that this is not so here in America?

Do you know that dolls are made so well and handled with so great care in Japan, that they often last one hundred years or longer?

Do you know that the games you boys and girls play in America, are played over the world in more or the same fashion, although the words in the languages of children of other countries would not be familiar to your ears? London bridge, I spy, tag and blind man's buff are played by the children everywhere, even the counting of this is "Eny, miny, moty, rum, spoin weeka and leter fogo," used by little German, French and Spanish children, and even the children in Arabia and Persia.

London bridge has a religious meaning in France that it does not have here. The two keepers of the bridge are called "The Angel" and "The Bad Man." The object is for the players to decide which one they will choose. The ones who have made good choice make the side of horses with their fingers extending over their foreheads, and pressing them have made a bad choice, looking upon them as fetish.—Indianapolis News.

THE STORY OF A PET CANARY.

Little Fairy was the gift of a dear friend and most beloved. She got it on her sixth birthday. He had a delicate frame, and his yellow plumage was ruined by a dark green cape, or pelerine, and a tuft on his head.

Extraordinary name, and taken connection with me, he developed a most human traits of character. He was allowed to fly in my sitting room, of course, he has taken that late whenever would choose, and he was particularly fond of lighting on my shoulder or that of my sister, and liked to feed from our lips. He would also be allowed to feed me in the purest bird-fondness paying. At his wildest time he often hopped about on the table and ate up bits of anything that he liked the looks of if not previously.

Once I placed a small, shallow paper box over his cage, and opening it, showed the contents to him—tempered, of which he was very fond—and then replaced the cover. I then opened the cage door and held it him to help himself. For a second he was out of the cage and, going to the box, he lifted up the cover while, however, immediately fell back in its place. Fairy seemed to consider what would be the best thing to do, turned his head about on one side and then the other, and then, the cover once more, gave it a little twist on one side which left the seeds uncover d and proceeded to help himself.

At another time I had a piece of apple to a string, showed it to him, but not ever out of the reach of the wires of his cage, and then dropped the piece of apple down so that he could not see it. He immediately began to peck at the apple with his bill, holding it fast with his claw until he thought the apple white reach.

If a piece of sponge cake, I'll is Fairy's cage, became hard and stale, I put it in his cage, and he drinking likes or his bathtub until it was soft enough to eat him. Our fairies used to bring him home plantain or grass seeds or portions of the ear, as soon as he entered the room and Fairy could hear him, he would fly about the cage in the most excited manner and seemed so impatient to get it that he would up in the air, hovering and pretend to be very angry, flying at me and biting at my fingers apparently, fiercely, but really gently. If he thought too some was taken from him screaming it between the bars.

One day when I was practising at the piano, he flew up to the parlor and seated on one of the window curtains, refusing to let them be turned over, and at another time he took possession of the upper part of the window sash and tried to keep on from making use of it. Once he was shut in the lighted one day on a piece of work I had in my hand and, with one hoist of the throat in my needle, interfered with my sewing.

On one occasion he was not feeling well, and, as he was standing on my hand, he quietly put his head under his little his wing and went to sleep, while I held my hand perfectly still, fearful my house until he woke.

Equally affectionate, too, it was to have him fly on my shoulder or that of my sister, and, taking up as we, pass forth an exercise love song, flapping his wings at the same time.

There was so much music going on in the house, both instrumental and vocal, that we thought the singing became somewhat muddled and changed, as if he were trying to harmonize the sounds that he heard. When I practiced my vocal exercises he would not be tried to see if he could not noticing me, and he broke out into a magnificent noise.

After a while a mate was given to Fairy, but them was never much affection between them. She turned out to be rather ill-tempered, and she cared more for his human associates than for her. At last there came three little baby birds in the nest, and then into four more. These soared were Antonio, Amelia, Bellini, Cordi, and Otto, and the two little sisters were called Josie and Beede. All were given away from time to time to different friends except Otto, the youngest, who looked more like Fairy than the others did, and my mother bird has got tired of her children, and would not feed them

RURAL DISTRICTS SHUT OUT.

Republican Legislature Will Devise Way to Protect the Farmers of Michigan.

The Saginaw Courier-Herald says that theories very often build up what appears to be a fine form of a sound, but impregnable position on any given proposition. And then actual practice comes along and at one fell swoop demolishes the impregnable position like the frosted sugar castle on a birthday cake.

That is the case of the theorizers who wish to force the abolition of corporations and the direct nomination system upon all the counties and political districts of this state, whether the people want it or not. They have been putting beautifully for months to prove that their schemes would give all the people full representation in the counties of this state, and which would secure more evenly distributed representation than the delegate system can give. And then along comes Alpena county, with its practical experience with the direct nomination system, and shows that the new plan is not at all sufficiently safeguarded to protect the rights of all. It will be remembered that Alpena county is normally Republican, as follows on the Republican ticket, but the nomination by the farming population, entirely out in the cold fiber had the power to do it, broke the majority.

But there are other practical illustrations of the system. In Kent, Muskegon and Alcona counties the county tickets were nominated by direct vote of the people. In Kent county and in the city of Muskegon in Muskegon county. The vote cast for governor in Kent county at the general election of 1902, was Republican, 9,066; Democratic 8,292, at the primaries held Sept. 16, last, the Republican vote cast for sheriff was 13,013, and the total Democratic vote for the whole county was 591.

In Muskegon county at the election of 1900 the Republican nominee for governor received 5,342, the Democratic 2,047. At the election of 1902, the Republican nominee for governor received 5,672, and the Democrat, 1,911. It will be noticed that at both of these elections the Democratic vote for governor was more than one-half as much as the Republican. At the primaries held Sept. 16, last, the total Republican vote cast for sheriff at the seminary was 188, that being for the candidate for sheriff.

In Kent county, at the primaries on the same date, the Republican vote for sheriff was 3,367, more than the Republican vote for governor at the general election in 1902, and the total Democratic vote cast at the same primaries was, as before stated, only 591, and 1,796 more than the Democratic vote for governor at the election of 1902.

In Muskegon county, at their recent primaries, the Republican vote cast for the nomination of sheriff was 1,537 or more than the Republican vote for governor at the election of 1902, and the Democratic vote cast for the nomination for sheriff was 1,524 less than the Democratic vote for governor at the same election. This tremendous falling off in the Democratic vote and the big gain in the Republican vote over the vote cast at the general election by both counties was caused by the fact that a contest for nomination was rested at the Republican primaries. They cut for the man who they thought is the weakest candidate before the election, and the result is that the Democratic vote was cut down and at the election hope to be able to defeat him. The Republicans will no doubt do the same thing in Iosco county localities.

Every man nominated at the Republican ticket in Kent county resides in the city of Grand Rapids, and four of the candidates are members of locals, prosecuting attorney, judge of probate and clerk, were nominated for the third term.

In Muskegon county every nominee on the Republican ticket is a resident of the city of Muskegon, with the single exception of the nominee for register of deeds, who resides in Muskegon township, adjoining the city. Farmers were nominated as candidates for the following offices: the four representatives, two for each district, and one for county clerk. Only one farmer was nominated in the county of Muskegon, and none in Kent.

This is really astonishing. Voters living in cities or villages can attend primaries and vote for the men they want for the various offices to be nominated, but a farmer living in the country who does not have finished his work until the hour of 4 minutes to 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and then drive to the polling places in the various school districts, are obliged to quit their work and lose a half day or more to get many nominees, the whole day, for the purpose of voting. It is only one conclusion to be reached should this system become general. That is, the cities and villages would control all nominations, as was the case in Kent and Muskegon counties.

The system prevails in the county of Alcona, and on September 6, the primaries were held and county tickets nominated. The Republican vote for the nomination of sheriff was 991. That vote was 146 more than the average Republican vote for governor at the last three general elections. This is more evidence of Democratic assistance in nominating a Republican ticket. The candidate for sheriff received 241 votes, less than a quarter of the vote cast, was nominated. There were polled in the township of Harrisville 270 votes. On the same basis, Harrisville could have nominated the whole county ticket.

Here is a little of the difficulties in connection with the system. Judge of Probate Jewett was nominated again by the Republicans in Kent county. The Democratic county committee had not to nominate anyone against him. Someone inserted "Jack" Adams, a colonial character of Grand Rapids, would make a good nominee for judge of probate on the Democratic ticket. He received one vote, the only one, for the nomination. The law plainly states that the Republican convention shall certify to the candidate receiving the largest number of votes. Will that one vote, "Jack" Adams has one vote to the good, and he, therefore legally nominated.

The above practical illustrations show how the machinery plan would work out in the larger scale of the state. The workers, part of the state, which contains the largest cities and towns and the most populous counties would soon have absolute control of state affairs in its own hands. It would, with natural selfishness select the state board of equalization so that the burden of its own share of state taxation should be fastened at the expense of the rest of the state, which it would be forewarned. Thereby this condition would meritorious arise; this rural and smaller counties would pay the bills; the cities and larger counties would control the administration of affairs.

The proper term to apply to this kind of an article is primary unfairness, or farmers need not apply. The Republican party is in favor of any system that will reform the misery of making all nominations. The plan that provides that the whole people shall not may be submitted to each county by the vote of the people giving each locality the privilege of choosing for itself. It would be forcing on the whole state against the wishes of a large majority of its residents. It is not just as fair to give the people of a city the privilege of voting for a city ticket as it is to give the people of a county the privilege of voting for a county ticket.

The Courier-Herald is demonstrating that there must be some system of safeguard in the presentation of a measure to the people. Experience is the greatest counsel in the presentation of a measure to the people. The present county measures must be politically changed. The Republican party is the wise one. With experience one teacher the legislature by its experience how to correct evils where evils exist and create other safeguards where they are, who live outside the large cities of the state.

"The several years of my political experience have given me information of the many unjust institutions and the general course of state affairs which I believe are to the detriment of the state and its people. In the past I have been able to economize in the expenditure of public funds and I shall be more than pleased to render similar and greater authority to urge such reforms."—Speech of Hon. Fred M. Warner accepted by Hon. Fred M. Warner at Muskegon, Michigan.

ROOSEVELT AND WARNER.

The Governor of Michigan Must be a Man Who Will Support the President.

It looks a little incongruous to compile the name of Roosevelt, President, as the leaders of the Democratic party in Michigan are doing. The Democrats say that he will do what little he can for Pingree, and as for the Republicans, he will vote for Parker, but he is trying to get the support of the same Republicans to elect himself. He is the champion of the "standpatters," "working both ends against the middle" is supposed will be applied to him.

The Democratic leaders are giving out that Mr. Roosevelt will not be content to pull that way for Parker, but that he will do what little he can for Pingree. A quick answer to this statement is that Republicans to vote for Parker, but they will vote for Warner. It is the duty of every Republican to elect himself. Mr. Roosevelt is the leader of the "working both ends against the middle" party, and he will be applied to him as the "middle" is supposed of him.

The Democratic leaders are giving out that Mr. Roosevelt will not be content to pull that way for Parker, but that he will do what little he can for Pingree. A quick answer to this statement is that Republicans to vote for Parker, but they will vote for Warner. It is the duty of every Republican to elect himself. Mr. Roosevelt is the leader of the Republicans of Michigan to prosecute in the approaching campaign, and he is opposed to everything President Roosevelt is for and for, who, as the governor of Michigan, will use all the influence in his power to help and encourage the Republican national administration.

The names of Ferris and Roosevelt are linked in Democratic politics as one. A man who votes for the former votes for the latter, and votes against the latter. No man can vote for Pingree for governor and support Roosevelt, because the president needs the moral support of Republicans, and the man or states who are in sympathy with his policies. A man who votes for Ferris or Roosevelt man, nor can a Roosevelt man vote for Pingree, in the sense of being a man who believes in certain political principles and supports them by action.

Roosevelt and Warner are names which harmonize because they are the names of men who believe in the same political principles. When Pingree and Roosevelt are linked as the support of the governor of Michigan to carry out the policies of the president, a call on Governor Pingree for such aid is a call on Governor Roosevelt for such aid. It is impossible to separate Governor Ferris, instead of Governor Pingree, from Governor Roosevelt.

There is no question nor what Roosevelt's vote will be throughout the state, and he has the right to expect that the Republicans of Michigan will support not less than 100,000 plurality, small in proportion to the vote cast, for the support of a Republican state administration, and the Democrats or any individual voter should think about and reasonably every voter who is going to vote for Roosevelt.—Wolverine News.

"My party is pledged to pass a primary election law at the coming session of the legislature and I will do my best to see to it that that pledge is fulfilled. I have made the statement many times, and wish to repeat it here, that whatever effective primary election law it seems best to the representatives elected by the people of this state to pass at their next session will have my hearty support."—Extract from speech delivered by Hon. Fred M. Warner at West Michigan Park.
