Economically, insects are very importance to the student.

Economically, insects are very importance of Agriculture that the tax imposed by the insects is equivalent to the normal expenditures of our national government. But, if it were not for insects, we probably would not exist, because insects are the chief pollination agents for many productive plants. Insects are carriers of malaria, yellow fever, and other dreaded diseases, and in order to combat these, we must study their natural habitats and life histories.

Pethap are most important, rescuss tatact our forests as well as agricultural crops. If has been estimated that the Hession Fly does a yearly damage of 75 million dollars to the northern wheat belts. And yearly we lose thousands of dollars because of grasshoppers.

In the near future, Northern students will have the opportunity to study some of the insect life. This various campaigness of the control of the

TRIP TO DAIRY MADE BY CLASS

Northern's Dairy class, as a supplement to recent class work, visited the Prison dairy on Wednesday, Nowethers 29. Mr. Millon Francis, who is superintendent of the dairy, showed the class through the dairy buildings. Most interesting sight on the tour was Marquette Cornucopia, the record butterfat producing cow in Michigan. The class was also impressed by the cleanliness of the buildings, animals and also by the sanitary methods and equipment used there. Mr. Francis explained the methods used in feeding, and culting the herd. He also showed the class how the milk and butterfat records are kept. The Dairy class also visited the horse barns and the farm plant tursery.

It is quickly large that the News from the News for the News WITH the publication of the last issue of the News for 1939 evident that a new spirit of co-operation has entered into all Northern activities. The most striking example, of course, is furnished by Northern's Homecoming celebration. A Marquette committee of alumni started the ball rolling. They were quickly joined by alumni groups that sprang up all over the upper peninsula. The Men's Union and Student Girls' League took hold of the move ment. A faculty committee joined in, and soon the machinery for the celebration was humming merrily with no lost motion or wasted

Marquette business men showed their spirit by digging up old pictures and trophies that probably had been moldering away in forgotten corners for years. The entire city assumed a holiday

It is not generally known that when the blizzard struck on the evening of the big parade, the officials were willing to call it off. But the band and paraders shouted that storm or no storm, they were going to march. And march they did, right through the howl-

The Legion Drum Corps, when they heard that the student were marching, hurried into their uniforms and fell into the parade on Washington street as originally scheduled. The turnout at the dance and at the Homecoming game the next day broke all records

The Homecoming was just a natural climax to the new co operative spirit at Northern. Throughout 1939 student, faculty and town relations have been at their best. The class Rush and parade moved along more smoothly than ever before, social affairs drew larger crowds than in other years. Because of the willingness of students and faculty to cooperate, the change to the semester plan has proceeded without friction.

We feel that all the groups concerned have not only benefitted greatly by the new spirit of their contacts with Northern, but have gained a genuine enjoyment from their co-operation with the affairs of the school. May 1940 lead us further along this path!

Visited By A Mouse
Whether it be "man or mouse", either visitor is rather uncommon as far as the Home Economics department is concerned. Last week, white one of the students stood before the class giving a report, a mouse wantelling the control of the control being any port, a mouse wanbeind a cupboard. One could not help being amused as each girl just hoisted her feet up not the chair or table ahead and, without customary strick, listened to the remainder of hriek, listened to the remainder of the report in the said position
