Medical aid was immediately summoned, the two persons revived.

According to the stories told by the couple, Mr. Larch complained during the morning of feeling dizzy and faint, and was resting in an upstairs room. EXERCISE FOR BEAUTY

MOST WOMEN prefer coffee in bed and a hot bath to a series of exercises and a cold shower. Women are like this in this respect, that they hate cold and avoid anything strenuous. The result is that few of them get enough of the sort of exercise they need. One woman to whom I wrote advising fifteen minutes of exercise every morning, replied indignantly that keeping a six-room house and running two children was all the exercise

A little daily exercise will increase one's beauty and health.

she needed! But it never occurred to her that doing household tasks after a set rule made it all the more necessary for her to do some sort of gymnastics bringing other motions into play. The housewife ought to study out the sort of motions she does most frequently in her work, and take exercises that will benefit other sets of muscles. Stenographers and office workers need exercises for developing the chest, overcoming rounded shoulders and developing the legs, since their work is sitting and bending. Girls who work at machines go through one set of motions over and over, should pick exercises to use other parts of their bodies, test they, too, grow one-sided in development.

Workers and idlers alike need physical exercising, based on scientific study. Fifteen minutes a day is ample, and includes the time for the bath. The result will be greater efficiency, longer youth, better looks and greater vitality.

MAKING LEAGUE A MAIN ISSUE

JOHNSON AND HOOVER STATE POSITIONS ON SUBJECT TO MAKE THEM PLAINER.

New York, May 7.—Senator Hiram Johnson and Herbert Hoover have issued different statements making clearer their positions on the league of nations, regarded in some quarters as a leading issue in the coming presidential campaign. Senator Johnson speaking of the recent California primary, had this to say in Washington: "I am very glad Mr. Hoover accepts so philosophically the result in California. Hoover said his friends registered their protest at my extreme opposition to any league to prevent war and reduce armament. Neither statement is correct. His friends introduced into the campaign every conceivable issue including personal views and I have never expressed opposition to any league to prevent war and reduce armament. My opposition has been to Mr. Hoover's English league, which did neither of these things."

Herbert Hoover authorized the following statement: "Senator Johnson is quoted as stating that he has never expressed opposition to the league to prevent war and reduce armament. This indication of a change of heart is a matter of great satisfaction. He states that he does not want an English league. None of us do, but does the senator mean that the covenant with the League reservation is an English league? This is the covenant and these are the resolutions which I have supported since they were first proposed by the majority of the senate last November. Will the senator speak out plainly on this subject so that the people may know where he stands and what he stands for in this matter?"

No Second Place. Washington, May 7.—Senator Johnson of California has supplemented the authorized statement of two weeks by one of his campaign managers, Rep. Nolan of California, that under no circumstances will he accept a nomination for the vice-presidency, by making a formal and direct statement to that effect himself. Senator Johnson has issued the following: "Under no circumstances will I accept the republican nomination for the vice-presidency. It is amusing to me that the men who are suggesting me now for vice president are those who are most horrified at the thought of my presidency."

PAYING THE FIDDLER.

During the war freight rates were advanced about one-third. That is to say, where before we had to pay three cents more for an article to cover the freight on it we now have to pay four cents. Railway executives think that in order to pay increased wages and maintain proper equipment and provide for needed extensions another increase of about the same amount will have to be made. That is to say, we should have to pay five cents where we once paid three.

This condition of affairs is not what by the result of the bad effects of the present cost of living. It is due wholly to increased wages to employees. It is largely due to the fact that an effort is to be made to bring transportation up to the point where it can take adequate care of the business of the country.

The railroads have fallen behind because of the excessive and erratic legislation by which they were subjected by the federal and state governments. For a number of years before the war they could not attract the capital necessary for proper upkeep and expansion. Railroad executives hesitated to plan extended extensions of their roads because the state also took their land and the federal government would not let them do so.

Politicians led the people of this country by the nose and got themselves elected to office on platforms that they would not touch a cent of the railroads. They have lost money, even lots of money and want to elect the right kind of men to run the railroads and take it away from them.

The people led by the predatory politicians and journalists proceeded to rob the railroads as advised. They didn't take all they had, but they took enough so that the roads couldn't develop property, a fact which the war made acutely manifest and which events since the war have emphasized.

It wouldn't have taken nearly as much money to keep the railroads growing properly in the first place as it will to restore them to good health now. We are going to pay back the money we robbed them of before the war and we are going to pay extra money too. We can't help it now, but we can help being led into other equally expensive predicaments by the same set of self-seeking leaders.

FAMINE

For many years famine has seemed an impossibility for the people of the United States and for most nations of Western Europe. We have seen periods of hard times, when it was difficult for the less fortunate to procure food and when many had to subsist by charity, but true famine, the food scarcity which kills charity with the fear that the who dare to have food may not in the end have enough for himself, has never been known and has never been thought of as a possibility.

In less recent times and before the settlement of America, famine was not unknown in western Europe just as in our own time it has been known in India and China. Famine was done away with by the modern system of commercialism and industrialism.

The modern systems of communication, transportation and credit have made it possible for the portions of the world where there was a surplus of food to feed those where there was a deficiency.

By war and radicalism this system was more or less broken down in Europe and famine resulted in some countries. Famine came close to other countries when the war was at its height and food production and transportation were interfered with.

So far there has been no danger of famine in the United States but the possibility of famine has been brought home to us. The greatest food producing country of Europe, Russia has suffered most severely from famine, not because it could not grow food through foreign invasion or unfavorable weather, but because there commercialism and industrialism were destroyed. In this country we could have men, women and children dying of hunger in all our great cities and all our great industrial centers. All that is necessary to bring about this result is to destroy capitalism, or to sufficiently disrupt industry and business.

STRIKERS TO THE FARMS? One of the possible results of the present strike is a "back to the farm movement" is likely to occur if the men of the Timberworkers' Union continue to hold out for their demands and the companies continue to stand pat on the conditions of the demands of the men.

While the strike in this country alone is causing an industrial loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars every week in the workmen, the companies and business in general, it is not at all unlikely, with this line of reasoning, that in the long run it will result in a wave of prosperity to this section.

In any representative number of the men, a union which is a case increase in production on the farms which with the prevailing high prices will mean thousands of dollars to the farmer.

On the other hand, if the companies agree to come through with some concessions in the way of increased wages, which they unquestionably can, while the strike of some of the men will likely be attracted by the extra compensation, and so back to work increasing the pay rolls of the companies and putting more money in circulation as well as increasing production on the farms.

While many of the men feel the loss of the employment, some of them believe that if they were to work again they are not members of the union are backward but it is argued by others that it is as fair for them to be paid as it is for them to be idle. If they have not any of the need in other men in those lines.

At any rate if the events of the past couple of weeks is responsible for some such seeking farm employment, the conditions gradually become normal in the mills and woods, the strike will not have been in vain.

WHAT SO EVER YOU—

We do not wish to be dubbed as alarmists but nevertheless the world seems to be on the eve of a great revolution. Unrest pervades everywhere. European nations are just seething with the spirit of discontent. America is not much better. While a nominal peace has been declared, there is no actual peace. Every nation is watching with a jealous eye every movement of its neighbor, awaiting the next development. The spirit of selfishness is hindering the dawn of the day of peace. This same spirit is not abating in the United States. The forces of capital and labor are engaged in a death struggle. Scarcely a day passes but some class of labor tries to vindicate its rights by the strike method. The possibly another factor so responsible for the increased costs of living as this method used by the majority of dissatisfied workers to force their demands on the situation of the world. When one class of workers ceases production because of a strike, the commodity which they produced is bound to soar in price, thus causing a general increase in the cost of living.

The mystic regard a dream of murder rather unfavorably. If you see others committing murder it is a sign that you will shortly be called upon to meet for the misdeeds of others and some, while others declare that it only means that unmy hard struggles are before you and it is a warning to "watch your step." If you dream that you are committing murder yourself look out for your reputation and consider well the work you are now engaged in. If you dream that somebody is murdering you suspect secret enemies and unforeseen dangers. In short, it is a sort of warning dream to be on your guard.

THE HIGH COST OF "BRIDING"

Old H. C. of L. is making his presence felt in darkest Africa. Lord Dewar who has just returned to London from Central Africa, states that the increased cost of living there reflects a nine higher prices paid by natives for their wives. A good wife, he bands high, cost four spearheads before the war. Now she is worth eight spearheads. In the entire district, a wife could be bought for four cows, whereas now she is worth eight cows. It is significant that a woman has increased in value at a much greater rate than a cow. Have our readers recently taking a wife, had cause to complain of the increased cost of wedded bliss?

Honest Toil

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

JESUS was a Carpenter, Cronwell was a Farmer, Washington was a Surveyor, Franklin was a Printer, Lincoln was a Bookwoodman. To get at great Character and mighty Achievement, you are invariably led to the source of it all—Honest Toil. We are all Tolders. And there is just as much dignity and honor back of the sweat of the man who digs with his shovel or wields with a hammer as there is in the hand of the man whose thoughts, trained and organized, direct the energies of countless workers.

The Glory and Reward of Toil lie in the Working Spirit that prompts the smallest effort of a Man. This earth does not belong to the people who inhabit it, but to those who, in Honest Toil, manifest its Benefits. You owe more to every man than any one owes to you. We are all Debtors—from the humblest to the greatest. Nor is any one of us entirely Independent. In Honest Toil, however, every man earns and pays for his Heritage.

The most Pitiful Man on Earth is the one with nothing to do. Whereas, the Happiest Man on Earth is the one with the most to do. So long as you have within you, sound and intact, the sources of marvelous instruments for Labor and Service in your Hands, Feet, Eyes, Ears, Mouth, neck, overlaid by a Master's Creation—Your Brain—Complain not that there is nothing for you in Honest Toil. THE MOST EXPRESSION IN EVERY SCENE, AND AS A MEANS TO THIS END HE PAYS GREAT ATTENTION TO ARTICULATION IN REGISTERING SCENES.

In "The Fly-Cop," which will be shown at the Gladstone Theatre May 15-16, Larry Simon commences over 25 sentences so distinctly that the movie fan catches every word uttered. The picture fairly talks. It is almost impossible to see Larry say, "I absolutely refuse" or "Can you beat it?" without experiencing the sensation that you actually heard him speak.

"The Fly-Cop" contains many original ideas—sources of unlimited mirth never before passed. Fancy a bowl of spaghetti that chewed tobacco, a necktie that refused to get lost, a human telegraph message, a detective that couldn't be killed, and you have some idea of the fun crowded into this comedy.

A motion picture that will thrill the audience wherever it is shown, not only because of its absorbing story, but because of its powerful heart appeal, is "The Miracle Man," a new Paramount Aerial feature, produced by George Loane Tucker, which has all that remains of the old barn.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE Fork me is an old New England dish which might well be revived. Vinegar, if rubbed first on discolored steel work, insures a quick and easy polish. To get the real, full flavor of mustard, it should be mixed with salad oil only. A tablespoonful of vinegar added to a warm bath removes all fatigue from the muscles. Vinegar and stale bread applied as a poultice nightly to a corn for a week will cure it. Mrs. Phil Richards spent the week end in Rhinelander, Wis. upon prices of food products. It will with pleasure that we saw very recently a report indicating that the movement was beginning to recede. One Cleveland native in writing to a friend recently said, "What's the good of $10.00 a day and time and a half if you've got to lay out from $20.00 to $75.00 for board and room?" Statistics in Cleveland show that 85 per cent of these fortune seekers come back home. We repeat, "What's the good of it? East, West, home's best."

Jacqueline of Golden River

I grasped my pistol tightly and crept noiselessly forward. If this should be a trap, I was convinced it was. I would not parley with him. I would shoot him down in his tracks.

As I stepped nearer him my feet slipped on a pebble which rolled with a splash into the bed of the stream. The man started and spun around.

but it is simple—straight ahead. Come with me! I will precede you. I followed him into the darkness, and very soon heard the sound of the stream again. And then once more I was standing at the tunnel entrance, under a brilliant moon and the chateau was before me.

I stepped quickly across the snow and opened the door in the dark wing, entered the hall and ascended the staircase, took the turn to the right and passed through the little hall. I heard Leroux's harsh voice within, and it stopped outside it was not in indignation but because I meant to make a croak of my man this time.

"I want you, Jacqueline," I heard him say in a voice which betrayed no trace of passion. "And I am going to have you. I always love my wife. I am not like that weak fool Hewlett."

"He cried, 'Do you think he was afraid of you?' " "You looked at her in admiration. You are a splendid woman, Jacqueline," he said. "I like the way you deftly move by heaven. I do! But you are quite at my mercy. And you are going to yield! You will yield your hands to me!"

"Never!" she cried. "I will find myself into the lake before that shall happen. Ah, monster!" her voice took on a pleading tone—"why will you not take all we have and let us go? We are two helpless people; we shall never betray your secrets. Why might you have me too?"

"Because I love you, Jacqueline," he cried, and now I heard an undertone of passion which I had not suspected in the man. He caught her in his arms. She uttered a little gasping cry and struggled wildly and ineffectually in his grasp.

I was quite cold, for I knew that to be the last of his villainies. I entered the room and walked up to the table, my pistol raised, aiming at his heart, and I felt my own heart beat steadily and the will to kill rise dominant above every hesitation.

Leroux spun round. He saw me, and he smiled his sour smile. He did not flinch, although he must have seen that my hand was as steady as a rock. "What, you again, monsieur?" he asked, sneeringly. "You have come back? You are always coming back, aren't you?"

"I have come back to kill you, Leroux," I answered, and pulled the trigger six times. And each time I heard nothing but the click of the hammer.

Then, with his bull's-bellow, Simon was upon me, flashing his fists into my face and bearing me down. My puny struggles were as ineffective as though I had been fighting ten men. He had me on the floor and was kneeling over my chest, and in a trice the other ruffians had come dashing along the hall.

Jacqueline was beating with her little fists upon Leroux's broad back but he did not even feel the blows. I heard old Charles Duchaine's piping cries of fear, and then somebody held me by the throat and I was swimming in black water.

"Bring a rope, Basul!" I heard Simon call. Half-conscious, I knew that I was being tied. I felt the rope tighten upon my wrists and limbs; presently I opened my aching eyes to find myself trussed like a chicken to two legs of the table and Leroux was standing over me, perfectly calm.

"Ah, Paul Hewlett, you are a very poor conspirator indeed," he said, "to try to shoot a man without anything in your pistol. Do you remember how affectionately I put my arm round you when you were sitting in that chair writing your ridiculous check? It was then that I took the liberty of extracting the two cartridges. But I did think you would have sense enough to examine your pistol and reload before you returned."

He picked up a scrap of newspaper from the table and held it before my eyes, deliberately turning up the oil-lamp wick that I might read it. I recognized it at once. It was the clipping from the newspaper descriptive of the murdered man, which I had cut out in the train and placed in my pocketbook.

"You dropped this, my friend, when you pulled out your pocketbook," said Simon. "You are a very poor conspirator, Paul Hewlett. Well?"

"Well?" I repeated mechanically. "He shook the paper before my eyes and then he struck me across the face with it.

"Who killed Louis d'Espernay?" he yelled, and Jacqueline screamed in fear. "I did," I answered after a moment.

CHAPTER XVII. The Little Dagger. Leroux staggered back against the wall and stood there, scowling like a devil. It was evident that my answer had been totally unexpected.

"Did you know this, madame?" cried Leroux, fiercely. "Yes," she replied. "You lied to shield yourself?" "No, to shield him," she cried. "Because he was my only friend when I was helpless in a strange city. You did not steal my money, did you, Paul?" she asked, turning swiftly upon me. "No, you have told me. You were keeping it for me."

"You lie, damn you!" yelled Leroux, and he struck her across the mouth as he had struck me. I writhed in my bonds. I pulled the heavy table after me as I tried desperately to crawl toward him, sending the wheel flying and all the papers whirling through the air. I cursed Leroux as blasphemously as he was cursing Jacqueline.

And at the door was the pale face of Philippe Leroux. Leroux turned on me and kicked me savagely and dragged the table to the far end of the room and struck me repeatedly, while I struggled like a madman. The oaths and execrations that streamed from my lips seemed to be uttered by another man, for I heard them indifferently, or rather something that was I, deep in the noise of my misery, he had threatened that if he followed a long silence, while Leroux strode furiously about the room. At last he stopped; he seemed to have made up his mind.

The two broadsword-bearers there within armor's reach, above the broken mirror. My heart leaped up at the thought of her valor. She had no fear of a man.

But I shook my head impatiently in answer and looked down at my bonds. I had been trying hard to devise some method of freeing myself. My struggles had relaxed the ropes around my wrists sufficiently to allow my hands two or three inches of movement, and I hoped, by hard work, to loosen them sufficiently to enable me to get at least one hand free.

The thing hard was pressing into my back, just within reach of my right thumb and forefinger. I let my thumb and finger creep up and worked at it. It had the form of a thin knife with a heavy, rounded handle.

And suddenly I knew what it was. It was the knife with which Louis d'Espernay had been killed!

I could just get my finger and thumb round the point of the blade. The ropes scored deeply into my wrists as I worked at it, but I had the living edge, and presently I had worked the blade through and had the knife out by the handle.

But was made thrusting more than cutting, and I had to pick the ropes to pieces strand by strand. Jacqueline had been imperceptibly edging away from her father and Leroux; she was now standing immediately beneath the rusty sword. And outside the door I still perceived Leroux, muttering.

I flashed across my mind that he understood the girl's desperate rage, and that he was waiting for the issue. I picked furiously at the ropes which bound my hands, and a long strand uncoiled and whipped back on my wrist.

Leroux seized Jacqueline by the wrists and dragged her across the door to me. "Look at him!" he yelled. "Look into his face. Will you marry me if I let him go free?"

"No," answered Jacqueline. "I swear to you that he shall be thrown from the top of the catamaran unless you give your consent within five minutes."

"Never!" she answered firmly. "I will denounce your father!" "You can't frighten me with such stuff. I am not a weak old man."

"You will think differently after Charles Duchaine has been hanged in Quebec jail," he sneered. His words received a wholly unexpected answer. The dotted looped forward, stooped down and picked up the heavy rope that wheel.

He raised it aloft and staggered wildly toward Leroux. (Continued Next Thursday)

NEWS OF THE MOVIES

The feat of catching a spy single handed is one of the thrills of "The Winning Girl," Shirley Mason's new Paramount picture which will be shown at the Lyric Theatre tonight. The episode happens in a textile factory where fabric is made for aeroplanes. Miss Mason is in the role of Jenny Milligan, a girl who is working in the factory, finds the spy pouring acid on cloth and grapples with him. She gets him twisted up in the rolls of cloth and he is taken prisoner. Jenny sets the reward, but a greater one comes when the mother of a young aviator who has won the heart of the girl, finally gives her consent to their marriage.

The story is by George Weston. Will M. Ritchey prepared the scenario and Robert G. Vignola directed the film. Niles Welch is leading man. Theodore Roberts has an excellent part. The others in the cast are all notable players.

The Gladstone Theatre announces its intention to begin an early run of "The Whirlwind," said to be one of the most sensational chapter productions ever made.

Charles Hutchinson, famous as a serial star, who is remembered as the feature player in "The Great Gambler" and other well known serials is the leading player, Miss Edith Thornton, recognized as one of the beauties of serial productions as well as a daring athlete, plays opposite Hutchinson.

"The Whirlwind" is being produced and distributed by the allied Pictura Corporation of New York. Joseph A. Golden, a veteran serial author-director was at the microphone.

There is a story told of a deaf man who learned to read lips by attending motion pictures. This man began by watching the players when they said "Yes" and "No." He watched every movement of the lips until he was able to distinguish every sound. Soon the pictures actually talked to him, and he obtained more amusement from a film than the average person.

Larry Semon, the comical king, is always striving to make the films more lifelike. He is struggling to get the almost expression in every scene, and as a means to this he pays great attention to articulation in registering scenes.

In "The Fly-Cop," which will be shown at the Gladstone Theatre May 13-16, Larry Semon enunciates over 35 sentences so distinctly that the novice can catch every word uttered. The picture fairly talks. It is almost impossible to see Larry say, "I absolutely refuse" or "Can you beat it?" without experiencing the sensation that you actually heard him speak.

"The Fly-Cop" contains many original ideas—scores of unlimited mirth never before tapped. Fancy a bowl of spaghetti that chewed tobacco, a necktie that refused to get lost, a human telegraph message, a detective that couldn't be killed, and you have some of the fun crowd into this comedy.

A motion picture that will thrill the audience wherever it is shown, not only because of its absorbing story, but because of its powerful heart appeal, is "The Miracle Man," a new Paramount Artcraft feature, produced by George Loane Tucker, which has been looked at by the Lyric Theatre for next week. The story deals with a notorious band of crooks operating in New York's Chinatown, who learn of an ancient patriarch living out in the country and possessing the power to heal the sick and make the whole crippled.

With the idea of making money out of his operations, Tom Burke and his pals go to the deaf and blind healer. Then commences a transformation in these crooks, that makes one of the most fascinating stories of all times. The chief roles are finely interpreted by Thomas Meighan, Elmer Fair, Betty Compson, and others of similar calibre.

CANARIES ARE YELLOW

ONCE upon a time there lived a very small witch in a very small hut right on the edge of a wide, sandy, low starting desert.

Now, just opposite across the end of the desert was a tiny wizard. He was about 1000 years older than the witch, but that made no matter in the way that such people count time. The witch had a pretty niece, and the wizard a handsome nephew. Of course, the boy and girl knew each other, but of this the uncle and aunt did not approve.

If I hear of your meeting that girl

"I will turn you into a wolf," said the wizard to Don, his nephew.

"If you ever speak to that boy again I will lock you in the deepest, darkest cavern in the world," the witch told Adele, her niece.

One bright moonlight night the boy and girl met at a bush in the desert half-way between the hut of the witch and that of the wizard.

"Meet me here tomorrow at this time and we will flee from our homes," said the boy. "I will bring our donkey and in two days we will be beyond the reach of our uncle and aunt."

Now, the lad did not know that a tiny bird had been listening all the while. It was a wren which disliked the girl, for it was jealous of the attention given her.

Don ran away to the spot where his uncle, the wizard slept. Adele went back to her aunt's hut, but behind her flew the wren.

"That afternoon when Adele was spinning in a shed, the wren told the witch of the plot to run away.

"You see what kind of a child you have cared for so kindly!" said the wren. "Here she is getting ready to leave you forever."

"I will follow them," replied the witch. "They will both die in the desert, but I do not care. My brooch is cooking and will take a long time, but I can catch up to them. You know I can change myself into a wren just like you."

As soon as they crossed the girl with a bundle in her hand stole out to the bush and there she found the lad waiting. She mounted the donkey and they set off across the sand. It was cool. The moon rose and turned the desert into gold.

"We will go off in this direction," said the wren. "We will have to cross the yellow water before we get into safety. As it is magical in the power, we must not let it touch us, for if it does, we will remain forever yoked."

Now after they had gone about three hours, the witch, in the shape of a wren, started after them. She caught sight of them just as they were crossing the yellow water. Don leaped across, then threw over to a log, on which the duncy bearing Adele came safely. The witch, who was later than she thought, flew fast and hard. As she skinned low near the earth she fluttered just above the log when Don cast it down into the water. One end of the log and his boy tumbled into the magical water. In to it she went as a bird and out of it she came as a bird, only she was a bright lemon yellow. She fluttered about in a wild rage. She could not talk; only sang. Never again would she become a woman; never again be anything but a tiny bird.

But Don and Adele got safely out of the desert and found a happy home among friends in the North.

THOMAS A. EDISON

THOMAS A. EDISON is a sleepless genius who invented the short-watt method of measuring electricity, which has made the electric light business in this country more profitable than running a hot tamale booth at an Old Settler's picnic.

Mr. Edison is conceded by both press and public to be one of the best and most fertile inventors the United States has ever produced. He formed the habit in early youth and has never gotten over it. He began life as a train boy, and sold the unpurged yellow-backed notes and the plastic gun used with great success. But he was not satisfied. Something within him, which has been bothering him ever since, impelled him on and led him to become a telegraph operator

THE 4-FLUSHER.

He thought that labor should be paid the very highest price. (He sought the workmen's suffrage and he knew that labor was right.) He sobbed about their poverty and wept over "miserable wages." A whole lot cheaper than it was it pained him to the bone. To see a workman prosper when the money was his own.

THE MAN KNOWS

Even the man who won't agree that it pays to advertise knows mighty well that it doesn't pay not to.

Pucker Brush Etiquette.

A great singer sings the melody and is generally made happy by an encore and sometimes gets two or three and I think by the incidents of the past week Tucker Brush should have an encore of music. Mr. Hignett's sermon was certainly inspiring and the facts of the Christian life were laid down so forcibly to the congregation that it caused, with the help of the good workers, us to come forward and take the minister by the hand and confute—Pucker Brush Items in Delta County (Da) Record.

IT WAS EVER THUS.

There was a man in our town Who would not advertise. And when his business ship went down It caused no great surprise.

Finisign Finisology

A man remembers a kindly deed he done for somebody else long after the one it was done for remembers it. By this we know it is more blissed if give than t' receive.

Confirmed.

"Dearie, it is being rumored around that you are my boss. What'll I say?"

"Tell 'em I'm not."

"All right, boys."

FRAGMENTARY CONVERSATION

"Scattering remarks," said the stenographer as she blew the papers away from the dictagraph.

Ben Craig of Tremay was a visitor in the city Saturday.

Frank Vogel was down from Tremay Saturday to do some shopping.

William Desmond and Frank Lanning pull off one of the most unique and humorously exciting fights ever, filmed in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher." Desmond's latest production.

The fight takes place in a creek, and it came near resulting seriously for Lanning. "Bare-Fisted Gallagher" (Desmond) and "Alias Pete" (Lanning) fall into the water after a desperate tussle on the bank, and continue the scrap there.

The battle ends when "Bare-Fisted" grabs "Pete" by his feet and holds him suspended with his head in two feet of water, the water-cure for the bad Mex. lasting for nearly a minute. Lanning's shortness of breath caused him to gasp and inhale several quarts of water, and he had to be laid out on the bank and pumped dry. Fortunately for Lanning, Desmond is an expert life-saver and soon brought his character-man to. At the Lyric theatre Wednesday night.
