UNDEVELOPED RESOURCES We speak of this country as a whole and of our part of this state in particular as rich in undeveloped resources but we do not usually realize in what sense this is true.

It is only by comparisons with portions of the world that have long been thickly settled that we can understand how little we have developed the resources of this region as yet and how many years it will be before they are all actually developed to their greater capacity.

Take our gardens and fields for instance. Every year we raise seeds enough in them to supply us with abundance of food if the seeds were transplanted into food products. No weeds are allowed to grow where the resources of the land are all being made use of, whether in the garden itself or in one of the seed boxes or corners.

In the same way our old fields of ground are yielding up a noble harvest and blocks are allowed to lie idle. In the thickly populated parts of the country for instance and in certain districts of Holland and in Belgium before the war, every square foot of land was necessary for building roads as well as cultivated.

And there are many other ways in which we are far from making full use of our resources aside from the great and familiar ones that we usually have in mind in this connection. Our wild lands, uncultivated swamps, imperfectly cleared farms, undeveloped water powers and so forth.

HARDING THE EDITOR.

Every true newspaper man has to learn how to "size up" the drift of public opinion on all great questions, and he does so by coming in contact with people and talking with them. That's one of Senator Harding's characteristics, and it is his best equipped materially since his nomination when he has seen everybody who has called upon him and talked with them, listened to their views and consiled with them as he has been accustomed to do in past years.

In addition to being a newspaperman in his home town, Senator Harding has also taken an interest in other industrial enterprises and has been a director in several institutions including a bank, several large manufacturing plants, and is a trustee of the Trinity Baptist church in his home town.

The newspaper men of the United States may well be proud of the kind of man who represents their profession in the great presidential race of 1929.

"The personality of Senator Harding, the country across the map, and on the way to the White House, is of that winning kind which has had much to do in making him a presidential candidate," says Arthur W. Dism, writing in the American Press, the official paper of the American Press Association which represents by thousands of newspapers throughout the United States. "In the first place, he is affable. A successful country publisher must be a man who can meet all sorts and conditions of men and women and be agreeable to them. Senator Harding is genial and communicable, and added to this inherent inclination in his newspaper training of many years, he likes people likes to meet them, talk with them, exchange opinions, get their views upon the multitude of subjects that always engage public attention. In this way he has acquired a valuable fund of information; he has been able to get the point of view of other people, he has been able to learn how many people look upon the leading questions of the day."—Menasha Herald Leader.

NO WORK! NO EAT!

There ought to be a law of "no work, no eat" in this country. Governments ought to do the way the bees do—put the drones to death. The fellow who does not and will not work is living off the industry of others. The fellow who thinks he is so rich that he doesn't need to work any more ought to have his wealth taken from him. Can't think the honest, hard working man who is doing his full task of labor if he gets any when he looks about him and sees so many drones who neither toil nor spin, but who always appear happy, well fed and with an abundance of the good things of this world.

EDITORIAL BY A BOY.

School is on and our vacation has started, but not for our month. Vacation for us is just months and weary for our class. When we are at school she knows where we are at. But when we aren't she is worrying all the time what we're making, or what we're doing. We're in, or about the cars on the street running as fast. They go on in waiting for us. She says, "What are you doing?" She says the rest of the town and she says, "What are you doing?" And she has more questions to ask because we get our things from school. But it's a funny thing about school. She never complains about it. She says she has to do for us, but she always seems about having done it well. When she goes to a party of some place, she takes us all along. We go to some for at all. She always has to be running after us. She says, "What are you doing?" She says, "What are you doing?"

LEN SPALDING IS ACQUITTED

NO EVIDENCE TO SHOW HIS CONNECTION WITH SPREADING OF SALT AND PARIS GREEN.

(Garden Bay News.) Considerable attention was given throughout the community when it developed that upon investigation a warrant was issued for the arrest of Len Spalding on a charge of spreading poison which was supposed to be the death of a cow on a farm in Escanaba. The investigation was conducted by Attorney E. B. Dism, and the jury of the circuit court in Escanaba yesterday returned a verdict of "Not Guilty."

The Spalding has lived in this community for over a half a century and has long been the best reputation. It is difficult to wonder that such excellent repute was as a result of the "accidental" poisoning.

A single peculiarity of the proceedings was that all of the witnesses for the prosecution admitted on the stand that they were not present at the spreading of the poison.

Mr. Spalding was much disturbed by the charge placed against him and when the verdict of not guilty was rendered by the jury, he was moved and heartily wrung the hand of each of the jurors. As the result of a combination of Bergreen, and Joseph Lavigne, were poisoned and died. The mystery as to who placed the poison is as deep as to who placed the poison is so deep as can never be talked.

Much Interest Aroused.

The poisoning of the cows and the placing of the responsibility for displaying the poison at the door of Mr. Spalding attracted widespread attention through Garden township and yesterday in spite of the fact that the majority of the township are in the midst of their hay-making operations a large number went to Escanaba to attend the trial.

The evidence submitted against Mr. Spalding was wholly unconvincing and the principal testimony against the defendant was that given by Joseph Lavigne, the complainant. He testified that last Friday evening he with John Adams and Vito B. Gray were standing at the corner near the cheese factory when Mr. Spalding passed, driving a team hitched to a lumber wagon. The witness said that after Mr. Spalding had driven a short distance down the road he saw him throw out of his hand, as though he was throwing something to the side of the road. The witness said he attached no importance to the incident until the following morning when he found that

Mother's Cook Book

How sweet and gratifying, even in common speech. In this series which main call Courtship as a r and genial as the night. Welcome in every time as bread of new era. It transforms alone into trusting friends. And give its owner passport round the globe. -James T. Fiddis. What to Do With Leftovers. One of the ways of disposing of leftovers is not to have any; but even in the best-managed households there is bound to be some foods left over. We do not wish to be ignorantly, nor yet so profuse in our providing that there is any great amount of food left over. A small dish of corn which has been served as a vegetable may appear again in the form of a few fritters as a garnish for a dish of chicken which was just enough for an appetizer. The corn is saved and the chicken is thus sufficient. Fish Balls Baked. Take one cupful of cooked rice and one cupful of flaked cooked fish, one egg well beaten, a tablespoonful of strong cheese, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, and salt and pepper to taste. Form into balls, place in a buttered pan and bake a delicate brown. Serve with slices of buttered toast. Salmon Salad. Any bits of left over salmon, if mixed with coconut, adding a few strands of chopped pickle and any good dressing, makes an appetizing salad. The lettuce as a border or garnish to the platter of salad. Sour Cream Filling. For a layer cake, take thick sour cream-not too sour-ship and add chopped raisins and a few coarsely ground nuts, with a few drops of vanilla. Mix all together, add a few drops of any flavoring extract and spread over the cake. Sour cream cooked with equal parts of brown sugar until thick, to which is added a few nuts, makes a most delicious cake filling and frosting. Sour cream may be used in any salad dressing which calls for sweet cream, making a dressing equally good. Most baked dressings as well as mayonnaise are improved by the addition of sweet sour cream whips as well as cream and takes the place of sweet cream. Brown Betty. Place alternate layers of chopped bread crumbs, with butter, and a buttered baking dish, having the crumbs at the bottom. Add chicken or turkey with a little brown sugar and bits of butter over each layer. Finish with crumbs and bake for an hour, covering the dish at first. Serve with hard sauce. Nellie Maxwell. The Confection of An American Dollar. Get a had start again this morning. A stenographer with red lips, redder still kissed by a lip stick on the sill, gave me to a taxicabner because she got up too late to catch the street car. The taxicabner took me into a gorgeous grog shop and handed me over to a melancholia man who hasn't smiled since July 1, 1933, receiving in exchange for my own good self a lastless liquid that looked like what it wasn't. The melancholia exponent of a foot art tossed me into the hands of a chocolate colored manipulator of mope. The insulting manner in which I was being thrown around got me all "set up" so much so that I started the pain of Bastian who hustled me into the churches of a handsome highwayman who peddled inflated prices to anybody who was being rewarded with a necktie white beyond the gorgeateness of a poisoned peacock. The new owner tripped meekly across the street and goodlyly bade me goodbye as he put three big black, bitter cigars in his pocket. Next I was taken into a cool, marble-lined building which appeared to be a convalescent hall for members of my tribe and where me and my bright, musical brothers appeared to command some respect for I heard a business-like voice saying, "It will cost you 8 per cent for the use of that money." At last, I'd to my goddess of two much. Here there is some one who still has a little affection for me. But my exaltation was short lived. I felt myself pushed out of a little window and a young woman wearing a scowl, a cigarette waist and a diamond about the size of a specialist's Adam's apple. She gave me out as change to a man with a cigar and seven children. After the show we went into an ice cream parlor where I meted away like a school teacher's salary. Chapter IV.—Continued.

And then gradually, discriminate only to a sailor's eye, like a dark blotch on the water. Walrus made out another steamer almost clean white in the rain later, as though in grim indifference of his vision, from the blotch there leaped a great red flame, came the heavy, resonant roar of the gun's report, and overhead a shell whizzed ominously by.

Alone a man, Walrus now placed the distance between the two vessels, though as to the size of the other he could form no estimate. But did it matter?

She was well armed at all events, and it was Ram Gulab Singh, once a government official, always a robber, and a murderer—the man who had brought his mother to her death, his father to his death, and now it was his own turn.

But he knew neither excitement nor demand. He was only conscious of something smothering itself within him, and that was because Helen Mackay was here. He shook his head. Helen Mackay, who had been with him, would never fall into Ram Gulab Singh's hands—alive.

On the bridge he could hear Layton calling down the engine room telephonically, imploring the engineer for speed; and then Layton's voice was drowned out by a dirge from forward by the crew.

Walrus, noticing the shadows of the deckhouses, moved forward to a look-thru under the bridge.

Mott was talking excitedly overhead. "She's coming up, hand over board, I tell you. If that fellow Walrus is straight after all—and I guess there ain't much doubt of it now—we haven't a hope if that chap out there gets aboard us providing he don't sink us. I say so, all astern until we get away off her, and then follow her to the boats. We could give him the slip in the dark if we don't wait till she gets too near to see what we're about."

Another voice cut in, Larsen's, as harrowing from aft he ran up the starboard ladder to the bridge.

"Help yourself, Mott," he invited sarcastically. "One bow's in a splinter and the other's carried away; the deck aft is a wreck from that shell that struck us."

"Light that Morse lamp," ordered Layton abruptly.

"Yes, and give him our position," sneered Mott.

"He's got it fast enough now," growled Layton. "But we'll give him something else. You there, Larsen, light it, eye hard! And Morse, tell him that if he takes another shot at us, we'll sink him as sure as hell."

"He's got it fast enough now," growled Layton. "But we'll give him something else. You there, Larsen, light it, eye hard! And Morse, tell him that if he takes another shot at us, we'll sink him as sure as hell."

A strange, slow silence held for an instant following the shot; and now, over his head, Walrus heard distinctly the clicking of the Morse set.

He strained his eyes seaward, watching for an answering flash, and after a moment it came—but not in Morse. It was the heliograph flare of the red signal, and again the red and smoky of the projectile as it tore into the Monaghan's hull.

There was no doubt about the range now, nor the logic of Ram Gulab Singh's answer. It was as though he said—the principle that dead men tell no tales. Ram Gulab Singh's ravens from Hans Gulab Singh's standpoint, were faithless—that a ship might appear off the face of the earth and he never heard of again, was one thing; but that she or anyone on board her should return to report that she had been attacked in these waters, especially those of Ram Gulab Singh, was quite another.

And then to Walrus came a spate of notes that he could not catch at that moment, recording some wild, absurd, bewildering kaleidoscope change in the scene around him. Again that terrific crash from a striking shell, and then a scream, unearthly, not human.

From the very bow of the ship—a tremor of the vessel from stern to stern, a grinding, screeching, wrenching of mangled machinery, a tottering and as though the engines had collapsed upon their bedstead, a cloud of steam whirling skyward from the engine room hatch, and there was no more vibration—and the Monaghan lay a helpless thing, with only a sudden movement now from the momentum of a moment ago.

He drew back against the captain's room.

They were rushing down from the bridge. Mott and Larsen were hurrying down the forward ladder from the look-down to the hatch foredeck below, shouting a confusion of orders to the crew as they ran.

A deck; and as a fire-drum shot upward, illuminating the scene, a bright light, the naked steel of a kris flickered in the downpour of rain, and dark, arming features leaped out of the darkness, and with a hoarse, guttural cry, the eyes of life. And here and there upon the forms lay sprawling and prone as had fallen.

Then ripped open a box of cartridges with his thumb nail and let the bullets loose into his pocket, as started over the weather-cloth it was left of the Monaghan's crew, and drove back on the hatch, leading to the boat deck. Ram Gulab Singh was making short work of his men!

He ran the aft, even if it were still midships; it was a pretty thing for that other vessel to have alongside! That was Layton and two of the crew on the starboard ladder fighting like demons, and by below him, on the lower port, it were Mott and Larsen and two or three, there were only Larsen, two of the crew—Mott had been blown down into the sweep of a seeming blast, and it was not clear what it was in mid air.

But was the matter below there? What was that infuriated, triumphant yell of the Malay, louder and louder as he ran? And then, as if he had gone before! Layton and Larsen from each side had a way—they were hidden under strange nets, and he could not see; but his voice rang out: "Sink him! Sink him!"

THE PICNIC

THE picnic is a place where people go to relax, from labor and study the bug faculty. There is no place on earth where the habits and personal exigencies of the wandering and disgraced bug can be studied to greater advantage than at a picnic, when the tabernacle has been hid directly over a smoldering hot hill.

Primes are held in the summer time when the grass is long and green and insect life is more animated. Great care is taken to pick out a day that will be up to the mark.

Young Peter assigned Parish, Rev. St. Donagan, who was on duty, into the preceding last June has been assigned a place as second and third in the picnic party. He has been assigned a place as second and third in the picnic party.

A dream of the devil often cited by the scientists is that of the famous Eighteenth century composer, Tartini. When he was only twenty-one years old Tartini dreamed that the devil stood before him. The idea occurred in him to hand him his fiddle and see what he would do with it. To his surprise the devil took the fiddle and began to play a piece of unheard possible loveliness. Tartini was started, transported, uplifted, and awestruck by the music still ringing in his ears. Setting his violin he attempted to reproduce what he had heard. The result was "The Devil's Sonata" which has delighted so many generations. It was the best thing I ever wrote," said Tartini in after years. "but what I have feared, I indicate and inferior compared to the sonata I heard the devil play."

Last Night's Dreams
—What They Mean

DID YOU DREAM OF SATAN!
THE mystics are not entirely agreed as to the significance of a dream of the devil. Some declare that simply to see the devil in a dream signifies that you will be very fortunate in life, others that it is a warning of temptation. Still others declare it to signify that evil influences are at work against you, and if you dream that he is present, these two latter omens may be accepted without discrediting the first one; for a man may be very successful in life in spite of temptations and secret enemies.

An Extraordinary Story
Exhilarating! Oriental! Exotic! Fascinating!
A thriller, but not of conventional type. Read "Yellow Men Sleep" and your nerves will tingle as if you had been racing in an airplane.
