Boyle Anderson. A very pretty wedding took place yesterday morning at the All Saints' chapel, when Miss Kathryn Boyle became the bride of Axel Anderson of Escanaba. Rev. Father Bennett officiated. The attendants were Miss Hazel Boyle a sister of the bride, and Raymond Wahl of Escanaba.

The bride wore a beautiful dress of autumn brown tulle and a large hat of Foch blue. Her corsage bouquet being pink carnations with sweet peas and ferns. The couple have left on a trip to Milwaukee and other southern points, after which they will return to Escanaba to make their home.

Mrs. Anderson needs no introduction as she has always made her home here and was employed at the time of her marriage as a clerk in Rosenblum's department store. Mr. Anderson is a popular young man of Escanaba where he is employed as a fire man on the North Western road.

The best wishes of their many friends go with them.

LOCAL MAN HONORED IN MICHIGAN REVIEW

(Michigan Roads and Forest)

Richard P. Mason, Delta County Engineer, otherwise and universally known as "Dick", builds limestone waterbound macadam roads at the rate of a mile every ten days. If every county had the services of a "Dick" Mason for a few years, bad roads would become a thing of the past. In any event, Delta county is well taken care of and with the assistance of one contractor, in addition to what Mr. Mason will do himself, it looks as if trunk line east and west through out Delta County, or about 56 miles through the past line of the long stretch from Cook's Mill to the county line, seven miles west of Bark River would be completed this season.

Mr. Mason has equipped the county with one of the best and most highly organized Koppel railway road building outfits in the state. All limestone, which is the only road building material available, is delivered from the standard gauge railway in hopper bottom cars. The material is then loaded into a large hopper bin and from there directly into the Koppel cars on the two-foot gauge railway cars. Each of the small cars carries one and one-half yards, and thirty-one cars comprise a trainload, which is hauled with ease and facility by the small locomotive. The track is built up along the shoulder of the highway so that the whole trainload is dumped at once and spread with a road grade, whereas only the finishing touches of spreading are done by hand. All told, the whole outfit runs like clock work and the spectator who can afford an hour or two may see 500 feet of road completed and there are no admission

The comparatively flat areas of the county, however, are particularly adapted to this method of construction. Where sharp grades are encountered a large gasoline tractor is provided, which makes the worst hill with the entire train intact, entirely obviating the necessity of relaying the road on the hill. By actual performance the outfit built 9,450 feet of class K macadam in sixteen and one-half days, between Moss Lake and Isabella trunk line No. 122 and this is about the average rate of progress after the outfit and camps are set up.

Furnaces! Furnaces! Furnaces!

Last year we took over the agency of Estate Pipeless furnaces; installed several around town and one in our public schools.

This year we intend to broaden out and put in the Caloric pipeless furnace together with the Estate.

The Caloric is a little lighter and cheaper furnace than the Estate but is guaranteed just as strongly as the other. It has a heavy ribbed freight that is guaranteed five years against burning out or breaking and if the furnace don't give entire satisfaction why we'll take the furnace out and refund your money. No better guarantee than this can be given elsewhere and we would like to have anyone who figures on putting in a furnace to come and see us, so we can tell you the advantage of the pipeless furnace without any obligation to you whatever.

The Caloric pipeless furnace can be installed in any home with a minimum cost and the upkeep isn't as great as a common every day coal stove.

It heats all rooms alike; keeps the basement cool with no danger to vegetables or fruit that may be stored there. No pipes in the basement to bump your head on or take up all the room, but still it will scientifically do the work or as we said before money refunded.

If it's worth a thought at least, come and see the Gladstone Hdw. Co. and we'll go more into details about either of them.

BOOSTING THE HOME TOWN.

Boosting the old home town is a genuine pleasure. What spirit could be finer and what could produce more happiness than to see Gladstone grow and prosper? What a delight when it is crowded with local people all bent on good fellowship, brightening up the place with legitimate pleasure and business.

Better streets, shade trees, flower beds, attractive store windows and everybody busy—that is what makes a town with the stranger who comes within our gates. More public drinking fountains, fewer stray dogs roaming the streets, sidewalks that do not stand from an inch to a foot deep in water following every rain—any town can have these things and can keep them forever if it so wills. Such things serve to bring trade from a distance, because it is human nature to want to visit a clean, up-to-date town.

The slowest way to get anything done is to wait for someone else to start doing it. The surest way to get the improvements we need, and ought to have, right here in the old home town is to start on our own premises. You can bet your eyes the other fellow will quickly fall in line. And when we're pulling together no town on earth can beat us.

Children look forward longingly to adulthood as the time of achievement, but adults, finding achievement less easy and less satisfactory than it seemed at a distance look back regretfully upon childhood as the time of freedom from care.

LEGION POST HAD FINE MEET

PLANS FOR ARMISTICE DAY MADE BESIDES TRANSACTION OF BUSINESS

The first meeting of the season of the August Mattson Post was held Monday night and the large gathering of Legion men participated in one of the happiest meetings ever held. Commander Dayton gave a brief talk before the real business of the meeting was taken up, telling the boys it was up to the men themselves to make a huge success of their organization.

Athletes Aroused The question of a football team was the first one discussed. The Athletic director, Ray Melroe, called for volunteers to try for the team and about 25 braveno, good looking men answered the call.

With the exception of the bridge over the Sturgeon river at Nahma Junction, the entire mileage of new highway, with all of its bridges now in commission. The floor of the bridge over the Sturgeon river is now being laid with concrete and will be completed within two weeks.

With the completion of the new stretch of roadway, a solid macadam drive is now offered from the southern extremity of Delta county, to within four miles of the village of Garden, in the eastern end of the county.

Report of Delegates John Olson on behalf of himself and Delbert Calder gave an interesting report on the Legion State Convention at Saginaw to which they were delegates.

Service men were urged to continue their insurance and have it again put in force if it had lapsed.

Boxing Discussed Boxing bouts to be staged during the winter brought about much discussion. There is every assurance that the license will be granted, application for which went in last week.

Plans for Nov. 11th After a lengthy discussion of the Armistice Day plans a committee of three was named to look after the arrangements, the committee being

John Mattson, Delbert Calder and Clifford Murker. These men will work out the details of that day's program. Legion men were asked to report all men needing hospital care and vocational training. Above all they are urged to stick to the organization in order to present a united front in the battle for bonus legislation both by state and the nation.

Much headway was made at this meeting as all members had ample space in which to express their opinions and voice their sentiments. It was one of the happiest and most enthusiastic meetings ever held.

COUNTY MAKES STATE RECORD IN ROAD WORK

By the completion of six miles of standard macadam highway, on the Manistique track, connecting Nahma Junction with Delta, the Delta county road commission, under the direction of County Engineer R. P. Mason has established what is believed to be a record in road building work in Michigan.

The road was built at an approximate cost of $20,000 and that of that amount the highway department will pay $5 per cent.

With the completion of the new stretch of roadway, a solid macadam drive is now offered from the southern extremity of Delta county, to within four miles of the village of Garden, in the eastern end of the county.

The completion of the new road leaves but a three mile gap to be completed to finish a solid macadam drive to the city of Manistique.

space to the top of the wall. He passed backward glance, whispered, and was gone over the edge of the wall. Levintson also turned to look, and saw Che Ming.

"You are condemned," said the Chinese.

"I am?"

"I am," said Che Ming.

"I am?"

"I am," said Che Ming.

"I am?"

"I am," said Che Ming.

After one of the large riders had advanced, saluted before the prince, and spoken, and following him, Che Ming had concluded the evidence, the prince moved. He rose quickly with a gasp, as he unfolded his long person and descended to the level of his courtiers. Che Ming bent down to the rug as this young royalty brushed past. The prince wore no crown. He looked a moment at the white prisoners, close up, such as a child regards two stuffed pigs. He gave no heed to the assembly. The royal litter came gliding up, carried by six slaves. In this the prince revolved his length. Swiftly he was borne away, his courtiers moving like a flock of sheep. His highness had uttered not a word.

A dull confusion of voices closed in around March and Levintson.

"What was our friend saying?" asked March.

"Blood mixing," began March, hurriedly; but they were parted before he could explain his meaning. March was taken away, and Che Ming's slave moved in closer beside him, looking very busy and dull. An order was given, and Levintson was led away, returning by the way he had come.

In his apartment, after sunset, he tried to think his way out, but failed to understand why he was not killed at once. Instead, a form of trial had been given them. Every physical comfort was bestowed. Courtesy was silent but unflinching. When he had returned from court, a tray of baked vegetables was awaiting him, with a pot of tea, a brazier, and a salver of cool grapes. Yet he could not forget the violence of their reception at the head of the ravine, and the refined hate of Che Ming.

He sighed to recall that the princess had wearied of their presence before the throne and had taken leave without hearing the conclusion of their trial. Their death had previously been decided by her order.

Finally, Che Ming had his own will in matters brought before the prince. Who, and where, was the monarch for the central chair that had been vacant? Levintson sat at the low stone table on the roof, to finish his dinner, and try to study out a means of escape.

In the circumstances, he felt that their fateful mission was doomed to remain unperformed. He looked out into the misty lowlands, where the drifting vapors were colored by an afterglow of sunset into drifting pink and plum, strands of illusive violet and gold. The flocks had disappeared. A weighty silence passed down over the valley—a twilight of apprehension.

He started. A curious object dropped at his feet. It was the long-tailed monkey with the white face. Inquisitive, the creature had come to examine the new arrival, but its eyes twitched with fear and childlike uncertainty. Levintson tossed him a red plum. The monkey seized the fruit and bit into it, keeping his eyes fixed upon the giver of the fruit.

"Well, little friend, is it all right?"

The small beast stopped munching, to think out a civil reply. Reflectively, sadly, he dug out the seed of the plum, inspected it, bit it in two, and forgot all about the question. He wiped his face upon his hairy forearm, and came a shining step nearer. Like a cat he leaped upon the bench, and began stringing in the bowl that had contained a tuberous vegetable new to the prisoners. The monkey was disappointed. Then he looked sharply, shrieked and sprang across Yed if she had known his language, his task would have been no easier. Con meant no disrespect, he almost felt inferior to her, but simply he did not want her.

The Arab girl went into the apartment to await him. The best he could do was to remain on the roof, sitting beside the stone bench. He considered the odds.

The stars appeared, and the final red and yellow gold was dimmed by the pale moon. Somewhere beyond the rim of the valley, a wolf howled, its cry coming in very faintly. Having no further use for his slave, who was also a spy upon him, Con sent his gray boy away for the night. The coolness of the fountains rose up about the palace, and in the infinite darkening sky, innumerable night stars glittered. The white man on the roof was lonely. He wanted to talk to March. The Arab girl incident was pressing. And something about the far cry of the wait brought to him bitterly the fact of Tan Kuan's isolation. It was folly to think of escape.

Con thought over his own life, and it seemed a betch. He had dreamed, thought, laughed, feared. He had penetrated a world from which strangers do not return, was now at the source of lovely fables and many tales of terror. It was all worth while, and yet he would be unable to report on it if he should; he had taken his friend from him, and the best that remained was death.

Resting his head upon his arms, he bent over the stone table, and his last thoughts were of a gray-skinned girl who had raised her arm, the same princess who had glanced at him across the throne room. He had intended to make a world from which strangers do not return, was now at the source of lovely fables and many tales of terror. It was all worth while, and yet he would be unable to report on it if he should; he had taken his friend from him, and the best that remained was death.

"How do you mean?"

"An Arab maid of purest strain will come to you. When beheld is born, you work is ended. But we do not wait for it to be born. Two moons shall suffice you."

The American was caught by surprise, and the cool statement of overheard arrangements left him speechless. Che Ming turned about and departed.

Levintson paced the roof in his anger at the fantastic injustice. From the words of his enemy concerning Tan Kuan he began to understand something of why this inaccessible country had been so wonderful a magnet to his spirit. He was glad he had answered the draw of this remote treasure-land. In other circumstances he would have been deeply interested in the claims of antiquity, and esoteric history. But his plans and purposes

The Princess.

Levintson was angry with himself for having slept, for he had intended to spend the night hours in finding some chance of escape, and now, in daylight, he knew no more of the city than before. He could not accept the impossibility of such a task, for his thoughts ran continually upon plans for flight.

Breakfast arrived—fruit and tea and brown biscuit, with the added courtesy of cigarettes in an ivory box. The round-headed gray negro squatted nearby while his master ate, and Con wondered how many kinds of blood were mixed in his heart.

The roof was hazy with morning shadow. The city seemed to lie chiefly on the opposite side of the palace, out of Levintson's view, for only a few poor houses bordered the edge of the fields he saw to westward. A white fog was steaming up, obscuring the low hills that marked the western boundaries of Tan Kuan. The gray visaged monkey was also present, waiting nervously at one end of the bench for his share. He grabbed up a biscuit, but was as disappointed as Con had been. There was no salt in it. But the tea was fragrant and scalding, and the tobacco was sun-gold from Tartary.

"Haven't you better go home to breakfast?" suggested Levintson.

The little beast did not think so. He stared at the white man, his bright eyes seeming to express a mute warning, with contraries of regret.

When the gray boy had taken away his dishes, Con stretched and renewed the process of wondering. His normal powers of thought, that had been snatched away in surprise and fatigue, had returned. He wanted to talk to himself, to quicken his own American identity. He smiled to think of himself as a United States secret agent, Wolves or wine or the job of a blade in the dark, any gift in the open—Con prayed for those hearty stripes. But the desert city, the palace maze, was against him. The evil gentleness was a strain upon him. It was far from cheering to remember that Andrew March had lost his nerve.

Con looked at himself in the clear shield, and did not recognize the hard brown face reflected. The sun that had darkened his skin had bleached his soul. The garb of a Tartar transformed more than mere appearance—white blouse above a wide sash, legs wrapped from hip to knee in white, he removed the sun turban, and glanced again, to see if any semblance remained of himself. He saw in his own eyes the luster of one who knows death to be near.

Impatience seized him, and he crossed the roof to the stairway. No one prevented his going down. To the left were a walled garden, the staking of a bird, and a dull rapping sound like pumping. He went to the open gate. The garden, close walled, was roofed with vines, which concealed the bird. A bronzed slave, crouching, lunged against the arch at the gate. A ruffian, soft and cottony, was reflected upward from the smooth flagging of the path. Levintson did not immediately understand the persistent beating.

meant nothing to him. He had no desire to aid in blending the races of the world, particularly not at the command of his Chinese enemy. His heart was Western and demanded freedom.

Twilight had deepened across the fertile valley when he heard footsteps and the soft clink of crutches. A slave, leading a girl, approached him. The maiden's robes were wet with rain. Her eyes were not covered but were intently regarding her new white master. Fear was written there, and fascination. Her breathing was troubled. The slave withdrew, and the girl cried out at being left alone, averting her glance. Con did not move, and presently she looked up again. Her cheeks were brown and smooth, her lips red. She was nearly as tall as himself.

"It's all right," he said, meaning well.

His first impulse was to send her away at once. But it occurred to him that this would not only hasten his own death but probably bring heavy disfavor upon the maid. She was kissing his hand. He raised her, wishing that the Tower of Babel had not resulted in such a marked difference between Danish and Arabic speech.

Commander Here To Establish Navy Recruiting Office

Lieutenant Commander Ertz of the United States Navy who is in charge of recruiting work in this territory, was in Escanaba Monday preparatory to opening a permanent recruiting station for the navy.

Commander Ertz was in quest of a suitable location in the main street so that the many attractions which are being planned will be before the eye of the public all the time.

A novel plan to instruct the prospective young men of Delta county who wish consider going into the navy was made known when the officer announced that a drive for recruits would be made during the week of the county fair.

Booths will be set up on the grounds and data together with information regarding the wonderful opportunities in the navy will be furnished to all applicants.

There will be two officers stationed in Escanaba all the time after the station is opened. It will be their duty to educate the young men of Delta county to the navy service.

Just where the station will be located cannot be said yet because of the shortage of suitable buildings downtown. Several places are under consideration.

The young men of America do not appreciate the great advantages gained in joining the navy. Few realize that there is a chance for a young man of any type of vocation to make a success. The navy is a nation of its own with all the different industries and businesses. There is a good chance for young men to learn their trade, study their vocation and save money so that when they reach their old days, they will be provided for. Our men will have facts to prove all these statements after the station is opened here," is commander said.

A.J. DeGrand Co. Disposed Of To Marinette Men

Among the business transactions in Escanaba this week is the disposal of the A. J. DeGrand Flour and Feed company to a new organization created by the Marinette Flour and Feed Company. The consideration of the deal was not given out this morning, officials of the concern being out of the city.

The DeGrand establishment is one of the largest produce houses in the state doing a large business here each year. The retiring officers have not yet announced their plans nor have the new officers of the company been named.

Louis Kubler of Menominee came to Escanaba yesterday in the interest of the new company although it has not been said whether he will continue here as the manager or not.

Mr. Kubler was formerly connected with the consolidated Milling Company of Chicago.

Plans are on foot for the enlargement of the company in this city. The present buildings will be maintained and additional ones erected while the concern prepares for the next years business.

NEWS OF THE MOVIES

One of the most important roles in Von Stroheim's latest Universal Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key," announced for appearance at the Gladstone Theatre on Saturday and Sunday, is that of Mme. Malot, a fashionable Parisian modiste, who trades on the folly and vanity of her patrons and leads them to extravagances far beyond their means.

This role required that the actress cast for the character of Mme. Malot must be young, attractive, able to wear the smartest gowns, must rise to dramatic heights and at the same time possess a keen sense of humor.

After interviewing many actresses Mr. Von Stroheim finally selected Gladys Brockwell for this role in "The Devil's Pass Key." Miss George gives a character portrait of the Parisian modiste that ranks with the finest screen achievements. In the hands of any but the most skilful player, the role would become coarse as played by Miss George, it is typically Parisian.

Miss George has been a well known figure on the metropolitan dramatic stage, playing two seasons with Nat C. Goodwin. When that famous comedian was engaged to play in several photodramas he insisted that Miss George be in his support and thus she made her screen debut. She has remained in the films ever since, appearing in such productions as "The Midnight Stage" with Frank Keenan, "Even As You and I" and "Idle Wives" with Lois Weber, "Frame Up" with George Fawcett, and "Blue Blazes Rawley" with William S. Hart. According to Miss George, however, her present role is the most interesting she ever attempted.

Gladys Brockwell, the Fox screen star, has sent to the Bureau of Ethnology in Washington the skull of what she believes to be a prehistoric man, found by her on Walnut Creek, near Flagstaff, Arizona, when she went there to make "Rose of Nome." In which she will appear at the Lyric Theatre on Sunday.

Miss Brockwell was taken on an expedition to the ancient ruins at Walnut Creek by Jimmy Swinnerton, the cartoonist, who makes his home at Flagstaff.

Ancient stone habitations and the remains of forts and settlements are strewn for miles up and down the creek.

Here and there are mounds and evidences of an irrigation system. In the mounds human skeletons are sometimes found. Miss Brockwell was digging on one of the mounds when she came upon a skull, which plainly was not shaped like the skull of the white man nor even of the Indian of today.

The Oriental splendor found inside some houses of any Chinatown is contrasted with the shabby exteriors, crooked streets, and sordid atmosphere where are usual in "The Tong Man," the Sessue Hayakawa picture which will be presented at the Lyric theatre on Saturday. This Robertson-Cole feature, made by Haworth, is the clearest and most vivid story of a "Chinese 'tong'" war which ever has been put on the screen.

It is based upon "The Dragon's Daughter" which was written by Clyde C. Westover, a San Francisco writer, who has a remarkable grasp of Oriental character. In telling swiftly-moving episodes the story of the love of a famous "hatchet man" for a Chinese girl is set forth. Complications are furnished by the leader of the Ho Sing Tong, who also loves the girl, and who by his manipulations, works out matters that the leading character is ordered on his honor as a "tong" man to kill the father of the girl he loves.

A harem gorgeous in its regal splendor, graced the center of the Metro stage in Hollywood last week when Director Henry Otto "shot" some scenes to represent the station that pretty May Allison has in her latest picture "Fair and Warmer" the Avery Hopwood farce now being filmed for Screen Classics, Inc. under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General.

The harem designed and executed by John Holden, special technical director for the production, breathes the very life of Sultanah Turkey, and is indeed a flower in the cap of its originator. Delicately subdued lights filter down from curiously wrought lamps of harem... per, and illuminate a scene of... beauty. Heavy caudrons peek forth their volume of strong oriental perfume, and dark, oily skinned attendants of mammoth size slowly wave huge peacock fans over the tout ensemble.

And such girls that these fans are waving over? Dark haired, red-lipped beauties from the fairest gardens of the world, vie for attention with crimson checked, languorous-eyed damsels of the northland.

Beautiful Turkish rugs swathe the floors, and heaps of luxuriously covered pillows provide resting places for this "ruck of the empire's harem" while on the walls hang heavy draperies of royal purple that lend air of distinction and richness to the entire scene. In the background a fountain plays and the tinkle of the water blends softly with the swaying of a lute.

BIG FIGHTER GETS YEAR AND DAY IN FORT LEAVENWORTH AND THOUSAND DOLLAR FINE

Chicago, Sept. 14.—Jack Johnson, former heavyweight champion, was sentenced to one year and a day in Leavenworth penitentiary and fined $1,000 today by Federal Judge Geo. Carpenter, for violation of the Mann act.

The sentence reaffirmed that passed on Johnson in 1912 when he was convicted of transporting a white girl from Pittsburgh to Chicago for immoral purposes.

Johnson later fled to Europe, forfeiting his $20,000 bond, and until a few weeks ago when he surrendered on the lower California border. He was a fugitive from justice.

Johnson's first wife committed suicide during the trial of 1912, and he later married Lucie Cameron, principal white witness.

Since his return to Illinois, Johnson has been boxing daily in his jail cell at Joliet and later at Geneva, Ill., in anticipation that he might be released and take up fighting again.

Johnson was smiling broadly when he entered the court room. When sentence was passed, however, he appeared much cast down, as he had hoped for greater leniency. Permittion was granted his attorney to file a writ of error and stay of execution was given until Saturday.
