JOHN MATSON IS MADE SUPERVISOR TO SUCCEED CALL

NO OTHER CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION MADE. BUSHONG AGAIN MAYOR

$2,500 SAVED ON BUDGET

The city commission with the two newly elected commissioners, James H. Murphy and Peter Peterson, met Monday night at the City Hall and organized for the year.

Mayor Bushong is still in Florida and will probably return sometime this month. City Engineer Eric Johnson is Gladstone's fourth supervisor on the county board.

Phil Hupp, who was elected a year ago for a four-year term as justice of the peace, received the largest number of votes at the last election. He may continue to serve his present term or he may qualify for the last election and serve another four years without another election.

City Manager F. R. Buschner presented a financial report for the last fiscal year, ending March 31, and it shows a balance of $2,500 from the $30,110 budget. He told the commission that at the next meeting he would present the items proposed for next year's budget so the commissioners, especially the new members, could familiarize themselves with the plans and make what suggestions they might have in mind.

Mayor Pro-Tem Hawkins, who presided at the meeting, commended the citizens who turned out to attend the commission meeting, showing their interest in city affairs, and urged that they return often.

In answer to a request from Commissioner Matson the City Manager explained what is being done for the improvement of Skelton road which will be used as a detour while the highway is in concrete. He stated that he had been over the stretch recently with County Highway Engineer Mason and that the city would receive county aid in laying gravel over the

TURNER MANAGER FOR AMERICAN EXPRESS HERE

Herbert Turner of Escanaba, began his duties here on Thursday morning for the American Railway Express company. Mr. Turner is an experienced man in this line, having held similar positions in several cities. He has lately been employed as Depot agent at Escanaba.

Eugene Dayton, who has handled the express business here for some time will leave next Wednesday for Flint where he has accepted a position as Athletic director in the Burton Field House.

LITTLE BAY DE NOC

18 INCHES LOWER NOW

The water level of little Bay de Noc is 18 inches below that of a year ago, according to Commissioner Peter Peterson, who is in charge of the Pittsburg Coal Co. docks here. Measurements taken at the docks show that this year's level is lower than at any time in history.

KRONAN ANNIVERSARY

The anniversary party commemorating the founding here of Kronan Lodge No. 25, S. P. of A. will take place next Wednesday night, April 22 at Wassa hall. A very fine program has been prepared and indications are that many members and their friends will attend.

starch. The talk of the proposed improvement brought to the minds of the new commissioners Peterson and Murphy, who have served on city councils of the past, remembered that it was talked 20 and 15 years ago, but little has ever been done.

GLADSTONE WILL HAVE GOOD TEAM TO ENTER LEAGUE

BOARD OF DIRECTORS ELECTED AT MEETING HELD WEDNESDAY

A strong team for Gladstone this year was assured Wednesday night when a meeting of baseball fans met at the city hall and elected G. R. Emson, Charles Green, James J. Jones, R. J. Riley and Gilbert Erickson as a board of directors to represent the Gladstone baseball association. A committee was named to call on them and ask them to serve and this they consented to do yesterday morning.

The directors met last night in Attorney Emson's offices and elected Jas. T. Jones president; Chas. Green treasurer, and J. A. Sturgeon, secretary-manager. Gilbert Erickson and the secretary will go to Marquette Sunday to arrange the schedule.

Not in years have prospects for a strong team, with a united fandom to back it up, been so bright. Nearly all of the players on the team last year, White, Dewitt, Johnson, Kircher, Johnson, Bevin, Deshlets, Murphy and Emson will be available for the local team. Most of these men have remained around the city even in the face of offers from other cities in the district.

There is much sentiment in favor of splitting the association teams in two groups in order to utilize the long jump and also to make it possible to schedule more games with the teams close by, Escanaba, Manistique, Manistowick and the others. There will probably be 12 teams to join the association this year.

Many complimentary remarks are being heard on every hand with reference to the progressive and liberality on the part of The Delta Reporter in offering a brand new 1925 Model "Flint Touring Car," worth $1390 and a wealth of other rich and attractive prizes in its subscription campaign. Just starting, and which comes to a close on the eve of Memorial Day, May 30, - just six weeks from tomorrow night.

The undertaking, while colossal in its way, has met with instant success in the eyes of the newspaper reading public of Delta county, and if the advance interest manifested be taken as a criterion, the undertaking is already an assured success. Never before in this community has there been a campaign of such magnitude and where the time was so short and the conditions so easy and liberal.

"Flint '40" - Big Feature One feature alone is enough to make this the most talked of event in recent years. That feature is the offer of awarding that beautiful, brand new "Flint '40 Touring Car," to the candidate securing the greatest number of votes in this competition.

There have been other contests in Delta county where there has been no car, or a pony and cart, or something similar, but that was not good enough for The Delta Reporter campaign. We want good work, and we are willing to pay the price for it. The best there is to be had is none too good for those who take part in this competition, and that was what we had in mind when we decided on the "Flint Touring Car" now on display at the Central Auto Co.

And can you imagine anything more alluring than a vacation trip to Yellowstone National Park, the land of sunshine and Nature's Beauty spots. Think of spending your vacation amid the mountains, hills, nature's playgrounds, and the innumerable places of interest, for your summer outing. We are offering as our second grand prize, the splendid above mentioned trip, with all expenses cared for, including transportation both ways, Pullman accommodations and Dining car service. Should the winner of this prize so desire, the optional cash equivalent for the trip will be given.

Then, too, there is that beautiful solitaire diamond ring, worth $35 set in a white gold basket mounting, a 3 tube radio outfit, ready to "tune in," worth $100 and many cash prizes.

NOB IS THAT ALL? Any candidate who remains active to the finish, making a regular cash report, but fails to win one of the big prizes offered, will be paid a cash commission of twenty per cent (one dollar out of every five) of their total collections. This arrangement insures compensation to all active participants, and means that there will be no losers in this race.

Get in and Win

This is not a "hearty" nor "popularity" contest but a strictly legitimate competitive proposition for wide-awake, energetic men and women, and in which determination backed by little effort, are the only requisites for success. As in all of life's games - business, political, social or otherwise - the most aggressive players pluck the "plums" while the half-baked, (Continued on Page Eight)

GIRLS SODALITY ENJOY MEETING

The Catholic Girls' Sodality held a very pleasant meeting in the Parish Hall Tuesday night.

This gathering was to have been the close-up of the campaign for new members, but on the contrary it was extended till the next meeting which will be the first Monday evening of May. It was agreed upon by an almost unanimous decision to change the time of meeting from the first Sunday afternoon of each month to the following Monday evening.

FLAMES DESTROY BARBOO LIVERY

LOSS ESTIMATED AT $200 IN FIRE OF LAST MONDAY MORNING

The Livery Stable owned by Levi Barboo was the cause of much excitement here early Monday morning when a fire broke out in the rear portion. The alarm was sent in by Harry Beckman. The flames had gained much headway when the department arrived, and about two hours were spent in fighting the fire before it was completely under control.

Just about every one in Rapid River was out to lend assistance and watch the blaze.

The origin of the fire is unknown. It is evident that it started in the lower window in the rear portion.

The building has been condemned by the Fire Department because for some time.

Although the results of the fire are not serious, it is the common opinion that if the department had not been 100 per cent efficient the loss would have been great, probably to the extent that the neighboring buildings would have been destroyed.

This livery stable has been the source of several fires in the past. The last one occurred about sixteen years back. At that time, it was thought that the building would be torn down, but on the contrary it

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the hasty treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Miss Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse.

She looked at Joan resentfully. Her face was quite composed again, but her eyes were reddened. She knew that Lancaster had been at fault, but she had seen Joan's blunder, too. Miss Symons was one of those women who can acquire the faculty of a man's strength without losing their own sex. She was a tower of strength toward weakness, but she had no pity for a lapse of duty.

Joan walked the dreary length of the corridor to the lady superintendent's room. The white-haired woman was seated at her desk, pretending to be making up her accounts and composing herself for the interview.

"Miss Wentworth" she began, turning round in her chair as Joan appeared at the door. "You have made Doctor Lancaster very angry. He said you are totally inefficient. What was it that happened this morning?"

"The ether made me faint and I couldn't see the instruments for a moment, and Doctor Lancaster happened to want a scalpel quickly," answered Joan.

"Well, it's a great pity," said the other, "because it was your first day and we had to get somebody to take Miss Martin's place and I selected you because I relied on you particularly. Anyway, you are suspended."

Joan looked at her stupefied. "You mean—that I am to leave the hospital and lose my diploma?" she asked. "I don't know yet," answered the lady superintendent evasively. "I suppose Doctor Lancaster will decide that later after he has laid the matter before the board at their next meeting and looked over your record. Anyway, Miss Wentworth, you may as well take a holiday for a week or so until you hear from us."

She turned back to her books while Joan, after looking at her for a moment in silence, turned and went into the corridor. She made her way toward the hospital entrance. And the great wooden arch, through which she had passed hundreds of times without noticing it, suddenly became vivid with detail; the hospital, which had been a part of her unconscious life, looked strange and new to her.

Chapter II

Joan had a room in a nurses' boarding house a few minutes walk away. She walked mechanically homeward, lightly even yet realizing the mental rule of the blow which had befallen her. Avonmouth lay almost deserted in the moonlight glare. The scattered houses, gray with sleep, stood blacked down on the white, dusty streets. The little park that contained the Confederate monument was bright with geraniums, but the grass was parched and withered, and the noble efforts of an automatic sprinkler seemed almost instantly absorbed by the thirsty ground.

Joan made her way toward an ever-living tree, brushed away a crescent moon from a seat beneath it and sat down. She was ready to exclaim the magnitude of the catastrophe that had happened to her, to free herself from the stupefied wonder and passionate resentment that held her. Two hours before life had seemed reasonably bright; now its entire course was changed. For she did not doubt that the lady superintendent had been trying to soften the news of her dismissal.

Her mind ran back to the beginning of all things for her—her father's death. That had happened ten years before, and the mortgage on the estate, ruined after the war, had grown like a spreading sore, eating away field after field, until it swallowed everything except nine hundred dollars. After the enforced sale, Mrs. Webb and her daughter had gone to Avonmouth for the sole reason that the mother remembered a wealthy godmother there, distantly related, whose activities she hoped to enlist on behalf of her daughter. It was characteristic of her that she should not have known the woman had died six years previously.

Still, Avonmouth was the nearest town in which she could find on the world untraded, might hope to support two people. Joan had long before wanted to be a nurse. She decided to attempt to enter a hospital; but now her mother's slow, mortal illness kept her nursing her at home. Six months after their arrival Mrs. Wentworth died. What remained of their nine hundred dollars after the doctor's and funeral expenses had been paid would suffice for Joan's present needs until she had graduated from the Southern hospital. But the physician who attended Mrs. Wentworth in her last illness had secured the girl a position as a probationer, and Joan was as happy as she could expect to be. Since that date he had moved away, and Joan was altogether alone.

At home they had known hardly anyone for the whole region was in that condition of resettlement that began in the seventies and is still proceeding. Their friends had scattered to the north and west; their letters had long since ceased. Prosperity, stalking through the nation, had left the little ridge of poverty between the foothills of the back country. In Avonmouth Mrs. Wentworth's illness, and afterward, the hospital work had kept the girl both from making friends and from the realization of her need of them. Her whole mind was set upon obtaining that diploma which would mean an assured living, and before her eyes was ever the spectacle of such poverty as she had known at home among others, and had seen approaching her mother. After she graduated, perhaps, life might begin to unfold before her eyes. But even this she realized only vaguely; she lived altogether in the moment.

"Well," said Joan wearily, "it's end

In the town of forty thousand inhabitants Joan was as isolated as she had been in the five years at home. Her life was as unsophisticated and as simple, and she was so unacquainted with the conditions and circumstances of existence that her dismissal seemed to her an irreparable disaster. She had had good opinions, she had been praised, and it seemed monstrous that her maintenance at a critical moment should have raised her whole life prospects. What made the tragedy the less tolerable was the admixture of absurdity. There was a simple and absurd explanation. Mrs. Webb's colored cook, Amanda, had quarreled with her mistress that morning, and Joan had had to go to the hospital without her breakfast.

"She got up and walked slowly homeward without having resolved her problem. Inside the boarding house the air was like a furnace, and the smell of cooking was triumphant and dominant.

Inside the kitchen, seen through the open door, was Amanda, the cook, and Mrs. Webb, the landlady. "Here's Amanda again!" Mrs. Webb called to Joan. "My dear, the idea of your running away without your breakfast this morning! Now you sit right down and have your lunch, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan was not hungry, but it was impossible to oppose the resolute insistence of Mrs. Webb, backed by the penitent cook, whose black face, as she tilted from the kitchen to the dining room, radiated remorse and good intentions.

"One can't get along without the proper food at the proper time," said Mrs. Webb as she set down the dishes before Joan. "But I call it real sensible of you to have come home early. Some girls wouldn't have thought of that."

Joan choked suddenly, and Mrs. Webb perceived her distress. She bent over and placed a kitchen-roughened hand upon her shoulder.

"My dear, what is it? What is the matter? Something gone wrong at that old hospital?" she asked. "Tell me now, honey!"

"It isn't anything Mrs. Webb," said Joan, striving valiantly to keep back her tears. "Well, then, I'm—'m discharged."

Mrs. Webb withdrew her hand and placed it upon one hip, bringing the other into corresponding position. She glared at Joan as the conventional focus of her indignation.

"I never heard of such a thing!" she cried. "Who's dared to discharge you, Miss Wentworth? Why, it was only yesterday Miss Gray was saying you were the only one in the hospital that attended to her work instead of trying to make dates with the doctors! I've had the nurses two years now, Miss Wentworth, and they ain't a snap better than the salesladies I used to keep. A pack of featherheads! If some of them had been discharged 'twould serve them right. But not you, my dear. It's that old Doctor Lancaster!"

"It was, and I think he was right. I felt faint from the smell of ether."

"Of course you did!" cried Mrs. Webb. "I always knew the day would come when you would. Those smells make my head go round and round whenever I take the short cut that side of the park. I always said you weren't cut out for that sort of work. It's all right for them strong-be-horse girls that's made for it. But what you need is to marry some good man who can take care of you, not to go nursing a lot of dock-heads and seeing people's insides opened up. It's my belief that when the Lord put our insides inside and our outside outside he meant 'em to stay there," snorted Mrs. Webb.

"Well," said Joan wearily, "it's end ed now. And I don't know what I'm going to do."

"But I say it isn't ended!" cried Mrs. Webb, concentrating all her indignation against Lancaster in a venomous glare at Joan. "It's only just begun. If that old Doctor Lancaster dares to discharge you, I'm going to tell everything I know about him. Miss Wentworth, that man's no more fit to be at the head of a hospital, with his eyes under him, than he is to fly. What is he? Nothing but a fast liver and a common drunkard!"

"Never mind, Mrs. Webb."

"But I do mind. To think of a man like that, who went about with a gang of common tramps for years, Miss Wentworth, just breathing away his job and hobnobbing it up and down the country and then coming back and getting his job again and acting as he does! All that I say is common knowledge. Five years ago the hospital had been the last of him in his walks, as bold as brass, and put the head doctor out, and says the hospital's under him, than he is to fly again. And him being in charge of the nurses—him that runs round in his auto with every pack of cheap dogs in his and he's going to run it, I know what they are! I haven't been in the boarding house business twenty years for nothing!"

"How was it becoming incoherent Mrs. Webb had exclaimed it.

"Now I tell you what you're going to do, my dear," she said. "You're going straight to that old Lancaster's house and you are going to ask for your place back. And you're going to get it, too."

"Mrs. Webb, how can I do that?" "How can you do it? Why, you can manage him all right, my dear. Yes, I guess he's going to be all right. I suppose he lost his temper. When a man leads the sort of life he does he hasn't much good humor left in the morning after he's got to run it. You just go to him and act as if you didn't care much and let him think you look on him as just the finest man in the world."

"Please, Mrs. Webb," expostulated Joan; and as she spoke there came back into her mind vividly the sinister advice of the dark-haired girl.

"You've only got to let him see your face, my dear," continued the landlady. "You see, it's this way. When he's in the hospital he's thinking about his work. A nurse is just a nurse to him then. But after his work's over she's different. Now don't tell me you can't make that man do anything you want him to, because I know better."

"Joan crimsoned. "I couldn't think of such a thing," she protested. "And why not?" inquired the other. "If you've got good looks, ain't you going to use them? It isn't as if I was asking you to do anything wrong, is it? You'd be a precious fool if you didn't. Any girl can twist a man round her finger, especially if she looks pretty."

"She looked at Mrs. Webb in great distress. She rose, but the landlady followed her toward the door.

"You see, my dear," she went on, "if you were given the sort of face by the Almighty, why shouldn't you use it to get plain, common justice done you? It's your job that's at stake, and you ain't alone in the world. All you've got to do is to make him forget that he's dealing with a nurse. There isn't anybody would think twice about it. Don't Amanda do this morning, coming to me with her big black, honest face, and looking at me so that I had to take her back, as I was glad enough to do? You go straight and see that old Lancaster and try it, that's all!"

A nurse passed the window and came up the steps.

"Mrs. Webb, you won't say a word about what I've told you to the others, please?" asked Joan.

She flew upstairs and, finding her loneliness swept over her like a black cloud, sprawling her. She was cut off from life, and utterly helpless outside the medium in which she had lived.

Because she felt this sense of home sickness her outraged pride began to vanish before the terrors that her imagination conjured up. Starvation, the ultimate term of her childish days on the estate, which like a living thing had gnawed into her mother's nine hundred dollars, seemed incredibly real and near. She must ask for her position back.

She must face Lancaster in his home, humble her pride, and bow to him; but she watched the sun decline and the shadows lengthen, and for a time she could not bring herself to her task.

What strengthened her at last was the realization that her status must be settled before she faced the day nurses coming home off duty. She slipped on her cloak and went out of the house softly, and to escape the landlady's attentions Joan went hastily toward Lancaster's home.

She had passed it almost daily on her homeward road from the hospital. It was an ordinary brick house in a new block at the north end of the park, and commonplace enough, but new, to her excited eyes, it seemed to reflect the grim personality of its owner in the staring windows, with the shining door knobs of brass, and the brass name plate. Her heart was beating with panic, and it was with difficulty that she contrived to press the bell and to remain until the door was opened.

FLAMES DESTROY BARBOO LIVERY

LOSS ESTIMATED AT $500 IN FIRE OF LAST MONDAY MORNING

The Livery Stable owned by Levi Barboo was the cause of such excitement here early Monday morning when a fire broke out in the rear portion. The alarm was sent in by Harry Bushman. The flames had gained much headway when the department arrived, and about two hours were spent in fighting the fire before it was completely under control.

Just about every one in Rapid River was out to lend assistance and watch the blaze.

The origin of the fire is unknown. It is evident that it started in the lower stables in the rear portion. This building has been condemned by the Fire Inspection Bureau for some time.

Although the results of the fire are not serious, it is the common opinion that if the department had not been so efficient the loss would have been great, probably to the extent that the neighboring buildings would have been destroyed.

This livery stable has been the source of several fires in the past. The last one occurred about eighteen years back. At that time it was thought that the building would be torn down, but on the contrary, it was rebuilt. It is expected that the remains will be done away with this time.

The pump was kept in readiness until about seven o'clock in the morning in case the fire would break out again. It was used to refill the reservoir tank back of the fire hall.

52,299 CHEVROLETS TURNED OUT IN APRIL

The Chevrolet Motor company is producing this month an April record of 52,299 motor cars and trucks or more than 2,900 for each working day.

This monthly schedule, planned also for May and June, has been exceeded only twice in the company's history. At the present rate Chevrolet will produce its "two millionth" car early this fall. It will be the first three-speed gear shift type of car to reach that total.

Of the cars being made this month, 43,556 are destined for domestic sale, 5,234 are to be exported and 3,500 are to be built at the Chevrolet plant in Canada.

Associated by the demand for the improved new series with refinements previously obtainable only in cars of much higher price, the Chevrolet production has mounted rapidly since January 1.

The capacity programme requires approximately 17,546 workers at the twelve Chevrolet factory and assembly plants throughout this country.

The popularity of the new Chevrolet models has developed a unique situation in which sales and production figures practically are identical. Unfilled orders on hand indicate that production for the next three months, even at the high pace set, will be absorbed at once.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, professional nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through the fault of her own, and makes a critical blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of manslaughter. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse.

She looked at Joan resentfully. Her face was quite composed again, but her eyes were reddened. She knew that Lancaster had been at fault, but she had seen Joan's blunder, too. Miss Synnons was one of those women who can acquire the faculty of a man's strength without losing their own sex. She was a tower of strength toward weakness, but she had no pity for a lapse of duty.

Joan walked the dreary length of the corridor to the lady superintendent's room. The white-haired woman was seated at her desk, pretending to be making up her accounts and composing herself for the interview.

"Miss Wentworth?" she began, turning round in her chair as Joan appeared at the door. "You have made Doctor Lancaster very angry. He said you are totally inefficient. What was it that happened this morning?"

"The other made me faint and I couldn't see the instruments for a moment, and Doctor Lancaster happened to want a scalpel quickly," answered Joan.

"Well, it's a great pity," said the other, "because it was your first day and we had to get somebody to take Miss Martin's place and I selected you because I relied on you particularly. Anyway, you are suspended."

Joan looked at her stupefied. "You mean—that I am to leave the hospital and lose my diploma?" she asked.

"I don't know yet," answered the lady superintendent evasively. "I suppose Doctor Lancaster will decide that later after he has laid the matter before the board at their next meeting and looked over your record. Anyway, Miss Wentworth, you may as well take a holiday for a week or so until you hear from us."

She turned back to her books while Joan, after looking at her for a moment in silence, turned and went into the corridor. She made her way toward the hospital entrance, and the great wooden arch, through which she had passed hundreds of times without noticing it, suddenly became vivid with detail; the hospital, which had been a part of her unconscious life, looked strange and new to her.

Chapter II
Joan had a room in a nurses' boarding house a few minutes' walk away. She walked mechanically homeward, hardly even yet realizing the magnitude of the blow which had befallen her. Avonmouth by almost deserted in the nocturnal hours. The shuttered houses, gay with striped awnings, looked down on the white, dusty streets. The little park that contained the Confederate monument was bright with geraniums, but the grass was parched and withered, and the feeble efforts of an automatic sprinkler seemed almost instantly absorbed by the thirsty ground.

Joan made her way through an ever-hanging tree, brushed away a cricket, and sat down. She was trying to estimate the magnitude of the catastrophe that had happened to her, to free herself from the stupor of wonder and vindictive resentment that held her. Two hours before life had seemed reasonably bright; now its entire course was changed. For she did not doubt that the lady superintendent had been trying to soften the news of her dismissal.

Her mind ran back to the beginning of all things for her—her father's death. That had happened ten years before, and the mortgage on the house, which she had inherited, had grown like a spreading sore, eating away field after field, until it swallowed everything except nine hundred dollars. After the enforced sale, Mrs. Wentworth and her daughter had gone to Avonmouth for the sole reason that the mother remembered a wealthy godmother there, distantly related, whose activities she hoped to enlist on behalf of her daughter. It was characteristic of her that she should have known the woman had died six or eight months ago.

Still, Avonmouth was the nearest large town in which a girl, ding on the world untrained, might hope to find her way. Joan had long before wanted to be a nurse. She decided to attempt to enter a hospital; but now her mother's slow, mortal illness kept her nursing her at home. Six months after their arrival Mrs. Wentworth died. What remained of their nine hundred dollars after the doctor's and funeral expenses had been paid would suffice for Joan's meager needs until she had graduated from the Southern hospital. But the physician who attended Mrs. Wentworth in her last illness had secured the girl a position as a probationer, and Joan was as happy as she could expect to be. Since that date he had moved away, and Joan was altogether alone.

At home they had known hardly anyone, for the whole region was in that condition of resettlement that began in the seventies and is still proceeding. Their friends had scattered to the north and west; their letters had long since ceased. Prosperity, striding through the nation, had left a little ridge of poverty between the swaths of its progress through the foothills of the back country. In Avonmouth Mrs. Wentworth's illness, and afterward, the hospital work, had kept the girl both from making friends and from the realization of her need of them. Her whole mind was set upon obtaining that diploma which would mean an assured living, and her eyes had never the spectacle of such poverty as she had known at home among others and had seen approaching her mother. After she had finished her studies, her life might begin to unfold before her eyes. But even this she realized only vaguely; she lived altogether in the moment.

"Well," said Joan evenly, "it's ended now. And I don't know what I'm going to do."

"But I say it isn't ended!" cried Mrs. Webb, concentrating all her indignation against Lancaster in a venomous glance at Joan. "It's only just begun. If that old Doctor Lancaster dares to discharge you, I'm going to tell everything I know about him. Miss Wentworth, that man's no more fit to be at the head of a hospital, with ladies under him, than he's fit to fly. What is he? Nothing but a fast liver and a conceited braggart!"

"Never mind, Mrs. Webb!" "I'm I do mind. To think of a man like that, who went about with a gang of common tramps for years. Miss Wentworth, just breaking away from his job and hobnobbing it up and down the country and then coming back and getting his job again and acting as he does! All that I say is common knowledge. Five years after the hospital had seen the last of him, he was walking, as bold as brass, and putting the head doctor out, and says the hospital's his and he's going to run it again. And him being in charge of the nurses—him that runs round in his auto with every pack of cheap actresses that comes to Avonmouth! I know what they are! I haven't been to the boarding house business twenty years for nothing!"

Mrs. Webb was becoming incoherent. Joan succeeded in stopping the flow of effusion at last, mainly because Mrs. Webb had exhausted it.

"Now I tell you what you are going to do, my dear," she said. "You're going straight to that old Lancaster's house and you are going to ask for your place back. And you're going to get it, Webb, how can I do that?"

"How can you do it? Why, you can manage him all right, my dear. Yes, I guess 'is going to be all right, if you suppose he lost his temper. When a man leads the sort of life he does he hasn't much good humor left the morning after. You just go to him and act as if you didn't care much and let him think you look on him as just the finest man in the world."

"Please, Mrs. Webb!" expostulated Joan; and as she spoke there came back into her mind vividly the sinister advice of the dim-haired girl.

In the town of forty thousand inhabitants Joan was as isolated as she had been in the latter years at home. Her life was as unsophisticated and as simple, and she was so unacquainted with the conditions and circumstances of existence that her dismissal seemed to her an irreparable disaster. She had no good opinions, she had been praised, and it seemed monstrous that her fitness at a critical moment should have ruined her whole life prospects. What made the tragedy the less tolerable was the admixture of the farcical. There was a simple and absurd explanation. Mrs. Webb's colored cook, Amanda, had quarreled with her mistress that morning, and Joan had had to go to the hospital without her breakfast.

She got up and walked slowly homeward without having resolved her problem. Inside the boarding house the air was like a furnace, and the smell of roasting was triumphant and dominant.

Inside the kitchen, seen through the open door, was Amanda, the cook, and Mrs. Webb, the landlady.

"Dear, the landlady," Mrs. Webb called to Joan. "My dear, the idea of your running away without your breakfast this morning! Now you sit right down and have your lunch, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan was not hungry, but it was impossible to oppose the resolute insistence of Mrs. Webb, backed by the patient cook, whose black face, as she flitted from the kitchen to the dining room, radiated remorse and good intentions.

"One can't get along without the proper food at the proper times," said Mrs. Webb as she set down the dishes before Joan. "But I call it real sensible of you to have come home early. Some girls wouldn't have thought of that."

Joan choked suddenly, and Mrs. Webb perceived her distress. She bent over her and placed a kitchen-roughened hand upon her shoulder.

"My dear, what is it? What is the matter? Something else wrong at the old hospital?" she asked. "Tell me now, honey."

"It isn't anything, Mrs. Webb," said Joan, striving valiantly to keep back her tears. "Well, then I'm—I'm discharged."

Mrs. Webb withdrew her hand and placed it upon one hip, bringing the other into corresponding position. She glared at Joan, as the conventional focus of her indignation.

"I never heard of such a thing!" she cried. "Who's dared to discharge you, Miss Wentworth? Why, it was only yesterday Miss Gray was saying you were the only one in the hospital that attended to her work instead of trying to make dates with the doctors! I've had the nurses two years now. Miss Wentworth, and they ain't a snap better than the students! I used to keep a pack of featherbeds! If some of them had been discharged 'twould serve them right. But not you, my dear. It's the old Doctor Lancaster!"

"It was, and I think he was right. I felt faint from the smell of ether—" "Of course you did!" cried Mrs. Webb. "I always knew the day would come when you would. Those snells make my head go round and round whenever I take the short cut that side of the park, always said you weren't cut out for that sort of work. It's all right for them strong he-horse girls that's made for it, but what you need is to marry some good man who can take care of you, not to go nursing a lot of dock-hands and seeing people's insides opened up. It's my belief that when the Lord put our insides inside and our outsides outside he meant 'em to stay there," snorted Mrs. Webb.

"Well," said Joan evenly, "it's ended now. And I don't know what I'm going to do."

use it to get plain, common justice done you. It's your job that's at stake, and you all alone in the world. All you've got to do is to make him forget that he's dealing with a nurse. There isn't anybody would think twice about it. Didn't Amanda do it this morning, coming to me with her big, black, honest face, and looking at me so that I had to take her back as I was glad enough to do? You go straight and see that old Lancaster and try it, that's all!"

A nurse passed the window and came up the steps.

"Mrs. Webb, you won't say a word about what I've told you to the others, please?" asked Joan.

She flew upstairs and, flinging herself down on her bed, stared out dully toward the moonlight. The catastrophe had swept her little, unsheltered world away. The sense of her loneliness swept over her like a black flood, appalling her. She was cut off from life, and utterly helpless outside the medium in which she had lived.

Because she felt this sense of homelessness, her outraged pride began to vanish before the terrors that her imagination conjured up. Starvation, the ultimate terror of her childish days on the estate, which like a living thing had gnawed into her mother's nine hundred dollars, seemed incredibly real and near. She must ask for her position back.

Joan had a room in a nurses' boarding house a few minutes' walk away. She walked mechanically homeward, hardly even yet realizing the magnitude of the blow which had befallen her. The little park that contained the Confederate monument was bright with geraniums, but the grass was parched and withered, and the feeble efforts of an automatic sprinkler seemed almost instantly absorbed by the thirsty ground.

Will You Investigate?

What do you know about the Science of Chiropractic? Have you investigated it carefully? If not, why? To be uninformed or to be misinformed is a sign of indifference. To be either is as dangerous as to have "a little knowledge." The people who "didn't know" are the people who fall all along life's highway.

Don't be prejudiced; and if you know nothing about Chiropractic, don't say that you don't believe in it. Instead, let your common sense and fair-mindedness bring you to INVESTIGATE it. Investigation of Chiropractic will dispel shadows of doubt, prejudice and the more you investigate, the more you will wonder why you put it off so long.

Miss Esther Johnson is the author of a poem. An inspiration came to her when she was all alone. She saw her class mates in future years, rising high above their peers. Professor—When I was a boy we had some mighty queer notions. One night our whole village went up on a hill and waited for the world to come to an end.

Interested Freshman—And did it?

Mary was a Freshman. Mary was a peach.

Ted took Mary to a show. They sat there side by side. When the show was over Mary turned to Ted.

I WONDER WHY

Mr. Haslitt—Define income taxes and the tariff.

FUTILITY

Keith Campbell has long harbored a secret ambition. Keith would like to be able to hurry up when he wanted to accelerate his speed, ramble. In short, Keith would like to be able to "step on it" when he saw fit to do so. This great ambition gradually took the form of an intense longing to reach Chemistry Class, the first period in the afternoon before the rest. For days and weeks he was worried and fidgeted and fidgeted and wondered how he was ever to achieve success in this matter. He finally decided that no man had ever accomplished anything without taking a chance. Columbus took a chance, and took what he did. So he and behold one afternoon at exactly 21 minutes after the hour of one o'clock Keith Campbell, rushing out of Mr. Waxner's room, down the stairs and speeding on his way to the new building. Keith ascended to the second floor three steps at a time (elevators will be installed next year) and reached the top in safety. Next, one and dive for the room across the hall. But what is the matter? Such a worried expression, a critical glance over his features. Well why shouldn't they be? Poor Keith has mistaken the room. Instead of the Chemistry room on the third floor, he has plunged into Mrs. Page's room of Junior High school students just below on the second floor. Why shouldn't he blush as he looks wistfully at his companions just ascending the stairs to Chemistry Class. Never mind Keith, every dog has his day.

Keeping It Mum

The Senior Spanish class has acquired the knack of impersonating animals and poultry. This very difficult problem in which success has been achieved by but a few. If their efforts continue, we have hopes of their joining Redpath innocent.

Good food, tastily prepared excellently served and moderately priced is what makes this the most popular and satisfying place to dine.

Come here morning, noon and night and you'll be surprised to note the number of entire families who eat here because they found it cheaper than preparing food at home and who enjoy our cooking and service.

This is really a sensible, satisfying place to eat.

AROUND THE U.P.

Eight-Year-Old Drowned
Houghton—Gerald, the eight-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Hondo, of Kipling, was drowned in Portage Lake. The boy, with a companion named Lucas, went to the lake and played along the edge of the ice near the Houghton county road commission's warehouse. The Lucas boy left for home and the Hondo boy remained on the beach. When he did not return the parents believed he had gone to spend the night with relatives. The next morning a search was started. Sheriff Rowe and Deputy Hamina took charge of the search and the lake near the dock was drained, the body being recovered in about six feet of water.

Hazardous Venture
St. Ignace—Two young men named Fabian and Alton Archambeau, sons of Joseph Archambeau of the Third ward, went through the ice last week while returning from hitting some nets off Grande Pointe, the long point beyond Rabbits Back. In going out on the ice they had crossed a large crack; returning, they went through the ice at this point. Fabian was up to his armpits in water but his hands rasped the edges of the ice. Alton was in the water, but with one leg partially on the ice, he managed to crawl up entirely and then to crawl round to the assistance of his brother when he got hold of the cuff of his Mackinaw jacket and assisted to safety.

Readers Tell Readers

AN HONORABLE DEFEAT

To the Voters of Brampton Township: The Farmers' Alliance Party wishes to extend our best wishes and appreciation of the support that has been displayed, even though defeated, by the vote cast on April 6, 1925. We appreciate especially the support given by the Brampton precinct, whose vote approximately on straight tickets was two to one in our favor. We also appreciate the straight vote cast of the residents of Kipling precinct.

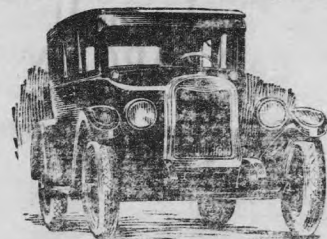

Further we wish to say that we do not so heartily thank the farming community of Kipling precinct for their opposition, but we hope in time to convince those that the aims of the Farmers' Alliance party are at present and may be appreciated in developments in the near future as of material benefit to the taxpayer, that is at present understood.

The sole aim of our Party is equal representation in the Township management, both in school and township, and above all a "square deal to all." When this height is accomplished we are satisfied there will be no more friction in Brampton township. We beg of our intelligent voters, whether taxpayer or otherwise, to consider and judge whether we are unreasonable.

An honorable defeat we regard as no disgrace.

Member of Committee.

Another Big Success
Goodwill Lodge No. 168, Gladstone's organization of Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, is noted for many things, not the least of which is the annual Easter Monday ball, a social event of importance. This year's party given Monday night at the Community hall was marked by the customary success. Between 200 and 300 company many from Escanaba, Rapid River and around enjoyed the fine program provided, to the strains of the pleasing musical numbers played by the Arcadians orchestra. It was a very enjoyable evening for all those participating. The committee, A. B. Cowan, C. E. Young and L. E. Davis, and the Auxiliary ladies who assisted them, are to be commended for the arrangements and their successful way of carrying them out. Decorations were carried out in rose and green and proved very attractive.

STUMPS CAUSE LOSS IN FARM OPERATION

That farmers all over the state are annually suffering heavy loss because of the waste caused by "tramp" stumps in cultivated fields, is the opinion of Larry Livingston, Agricultural engineering specialist with the M. A. C. extension division.

Not following in the footsteps of the congressmen who recently increased their own pay, the House defeated Rep. Palmer's resolution which would have submitted to the electors a constitutional amendment increasing the pay of the legislators from $800 to $1,800.

Says Mentha Cheerfully Refunded if One Bottle of Dare's Mentha Pepsin Doesn't Stop Gas, Indigestion or Any Distressing Stomach Trouble

Indolent eating causes acute indigestion, gas, acidity, heaviness and sour stomach—sometimes the distended stomach causes that dreadful feeling of near suffocation.

It ends indigestion, gastritis, catarrh of the stomach and does it in a surprisingly short period of time.

This is no common stomach remedy for it took years of time to combine Pepsin with Menthol and the other effective agents that make Dare's Mentha Pepsin so good that the worst cases of indigestion and gastritis and other chronic stomach ailments are speedily overcome and the most badly deranged stomachs are made clean, strong and healthy.

You can get one bottle of Dare's Mentha Pepsin and if after you take it you do not say "I did your stomach more good than anything you ever used before, your money will be waiting for you. This is a straightforward offer and is so understood by Gladstone druggists and every druggist everywhere.
