

CONTESTANTS WORKING HARD AS THE END DRAWS NEAR

10 O'Clock Saturday Night Last Chance To Get Big Votes

Candidates are Urged to Make This Their "Banner Week"—Results Obtained Now Will Determine The Winners

If you think you are beaten, you are; if you think you dare not, you don't; if you like to win, but think you can't, it's almost a cinch you won't; if you think you'll lose, you're lost; for out in the world you'll find, Success begins with a fellow's will, It's all in the state of mind.

Warning! It is now a matter of hours! Just a few more circuits of the minute hand, and—ton night! It today and tomorrow pass without speedy action on your part the responsibility rests upon yourself.

Saturday night—at 10 o'clock, not one minute later—marks the close of the "First Period" in The Reporter's Big Automobile Contest. After that time, and throughout the remainder of our big subscription campaign, there is a material decrease in the voting power of subscriptions.

Long term subscriptions count BIG, and a few such orders NOW—while they count MOST—might be the deciding factor in this race. To any event, you can only lose by holding back subscriptions now, and after the time for action has passed all the regret in the world will be of no avail. Now is the time to secure an insurmountable reserve vote. Now is the time to make reasonably certain the prize you most desire.

As the clock ticks away the golden hours between now and Saturday night, those who avail themselves of the opportunity this "period" affords and unless every moment of the remaining time to their advantage will unquestionably be numbered among those who will qualify in the finals for the major awards.

Count on Facts Only As a timely and late warning, DON'T try to figure out how many votes it will take, to win, or you will surely fail to get enough. DON'T be afraid of having too many. It would be better to win the prize you most desire by a million votes more than enough than to be beaten by a few hundred thousand, representing a mere handful of subscriptions. DON'T let this happen to you. There have been too many for regrets if you but heed expert advice and back it up with a speedy number of subscriptions.

At any rate, this Saturday night will be a considerable part of the story. Your fate is in your own hands. We can help you only by telling you how. You can sweeten or embitter it yourself. Your own subscription counts.

How "Period" Will Close The "first period" will end with the closing of The Delta Reporter's office Saturday night. The time is set for 10 o'clock p. m., but should any candidate be unable to report in full by that hour the time will be extended to meet their requirements.

Candidates are requested to come to the office as early as possible. They will be waited on in their turn—first come, first served. The Delta Reporter's office will close as soon as all candidates have reported in full, and with its closing the "first period" of the campaign ends and the BIG votes will be over.

There will positively be no subscriptions accepted for the "first period" after Saturday night, no matter what the conditions, EXCEPT such subscriptions that may be marked with letters postmarked Saturday, May 9. This arrangement permits OUT OF TOWN candidates and the friends of candidates residing outside the city to mail subscriptions late at the closing hour of the "first period" and receive BIG votes thereon, even though the orders do not reach the Campaign Department until Monday morning, May 11.

Make or Break Now! Never again, after Saturday night, will it be possible to warn the full voting power on subscriptions. If you hold back any subscriptions, or rely on "promises" to subscribe at a later date, simply means that you will have to take less votes on such orders. We are putting it up to you squarely. If you entertain any desire whatever of winning that FLINT "49" TOURING CAR worth $1250, do not fail to turn in every available subscription to your account before this Saturday night.

Of course, the race does not come to a close until Memorial Day, May 30, but the big prize winners are sure to be among those who make the best record this week. The crucial test in this big hand if you intend doing anything at hand in this race, DO IT NOW! Instead of being a trailer, GET UP AMONG THE LEADERS AND STAY THERE.

TIME IS LIMITED! Act quickly before it is too late.

Campaign Notes Vern H. Fox has jumped into first place today and seems determined with the aid of his many friends to remain there. He is working diligently and doing some real hustling. But a close runner up is Mrs. H. G. Wescott, who declares that in the heat of it all she is going to ride in her own "FLINT" on Memorial Day, May 30, or someone will have to work a great deal harder than she. Her many friends are giving her nice support.

Miss Juanita Kanney, our energetic campaigner from "up Rapid River" seems to take another position into camp with every count. She is now in third place. In a chat with the campaign manager today she mentioned "that the top of the ladder was not too high for her to climb, and the assistance and aid she has been receiving from her Rapid River friends was fine for her the place she wants. Fred F. Tague, that hustling go-getter from Brampton has raised two notches, but when he called at this office today, he gave us a mighty good alibi for not having more subscriptions than he had. But, he had better watch him, for he's out today and is going to "hit 'em hard" until the final whistle blows, three weeks hence.

Lucille Dumas, down on 1105 Delta Avenue, is showing us evidence of real canvassing and if your asking us, she is striving hard for that Big Flint Car. Her friends are helping her in this shape and she says that there will be a change in the lineup on the next count.

Then too, Miss Norma Kev and Miss McLaughlin have been doing some good work for the campaign, and the neither are on the top this week, they have promised us some real reports, "ere the votes go down next Saturday night at 10 o'clock. Now that's our lineup so watch 'em now!

SENIORS CELEBRATE SKIP DAY

The Senior Class of '25 played "hooky" on Wednesday and spent the day at Iron Mountain. The trip was made by motor, five cars in all. It was arranged to meet at the Community Building corner at eight o'clock and start immediately, but the anxious looks on the faces of the students still parading Delta avenue at nine o'clock made it seem that this year's annual "skip day" was to be a failure for the lack of cars. This deficiency was finally remedied, and the bunch left here in high spirits.

The class turned out 100 per cent in absenting themselves from their classes. It proved a thoroughly enjoyable day for everyone, despite the cold weather, even for Kenneth Campbell, who was sent to purchase groceries at a Cony Island Shop on the way home and when arriving there found that he had mistaken an advertisement of "Hot Winters While You Wait" for the candy report.

Mr. Stock had never regained his health after being struck by a car on the Kipling road about eighteen months ago. Since that time he has not been able to work regularly. BUDGET FIGURES KEPT AT LEVEL 1924, $31,110

COMPLETE APPROPRIATIONS FOR ALL FUNDS SHOWN IN THIS ISSUE

HEARING SET FOR MAY 25

Manager F. R. Buchner presented the budget to the City Commission at the meeting held Monday night. The estimated appropriations were kept at the level of last year, $31,100. There are some changes in some of the funds but these were changed only to meet the requirements of the current year, which was placed in the contingent fund and which made it possible to hold the amount to be spread on the tax roll.

The complete budget is printed on another page of this issue. Citizens who are interested in their city government will go over these. The hearing on the budget has been set for May 25 at the city hall, at which time taxpayers may make recommendations for any changes they desire.

Commissioner Peterson felt that there might be a saving in the police fund by eliminating one policeman and selling the police car. No action was taken on this and it will come up later for disposal.

ROTARY DELEGATES TELL OF MEETING

The members of the Rotary Club enjoyed a very pleasant meeting Monday noon at their regular luncheon. Very interesting talks were given by those who represented the local organization at the Tenth District Rotary Convention held at Madison Wisconsin, last week. President R. J. Riley, discussed the benefits gained by the convention. H. Rosenbaum and J. T. Jones also spoke on this subject.

John M. Olson mentioned some of their experiences there and especially of the way going. He and Henry Rosenbaum motored there and arrived twelve hours late. They came to a fork in the roads in Wisconsin, and as each road leading therefrom was a trunkline, they were at a loss to know which to take. Their "lucky guess" proved wrong, and they accordingly traveled many hours of the night in the opposite direction to Madison. They finally consulted a farmer of the locality, who informed them of their whereabouts.

The program committee composed of A. Peterson, chairman, H. J. Norton, C. Tague and F. R. Buchner will meet the latter part of the week to make plans for the program at the coming Monday's meet. They will endeavor to procure an outside speaker if possible.

TO ESTABLISH BEE KEEPING IN PENINSULA

Word comes from the Stover Appliance, located in Mahew, Miss., that later in the year they will return to the upper peninsula with at least 500 swarms of bees, the same number which they brought here last year and placed in Chippewa county.

"We will bring up at least as many bees this year as we did last year, and we may decide to double the number," says M. S. Fortune of the Stover company, who adds that the move to upper Michigan probably will be made about May 1.

Mr. Stover is recognized as one of the outstanding beekeepers in the south and his coming to the upper peninsula was an important step forward in the movement by state agriculturists to establish bee-keeping as a permanent industry in this part of Michigan.

DO YOU KNOW?

Rules of etiquette all should know.

THE DEBUTANTE AND HER ESCORT

In every social relation, it is important for both the man and the girl to know what is the accepted usage for each to follow. The girl who knows exactly what her escort should do, cooperates with him, and smooths his way as well as her own. For example a girl should stand aside to allow her escort to open and to hold a door wide for her to pass through. She never should open the door herself simply because she happens to precede the man.

A man who has taken a girl to a dance is responsible for seeing that her program is filled, or that she is taken care of, in some way for every dance on the program. At the conclusion of a dance number, a man takes his partner to the place where she was sitting when the dance commenced. He takes care to express his pleasure in the dance, and remaining with her until time for her next partner to approach, or until it is necessary for him to seek the one he has engaged for the following dance.

A prolonged tête-à-tête conversation carried on in the midst of an assembly, or in shadowy corners of a ballroom is a conspicuous advertisement of one's ignorance of good form. Un-sophisticated girls and vain women often promote this sort of thing as proof of their power to "charm." It is, however, only a striking evidence of their indifference to good taste.

It is not good form for a girl to reach for her wrap, scarf, bag or other belongings in a hotel dining-room, a restaurant or similar environment. Her escort obtains these articles for her from the waiter if a man. Girl waiters do not usually perform such services. Obviously, this item has nothing to do with checkrooms or the service in clubs and private homes.

It is never proper for a girl to put a man's hat and coat or him in her own home or elsewhere. A man is supposed to be competent to take care of his personal belongings.

In the theater, the man precedes the woman down the aisle, carrying the seat checks until he is met by the usher, whom he follows. When the usher indicates the seats, the man steps aside to allow the woman to precede him to her seat in the row. If there is a party, the men and women seat themselves alternately, or otherwise if they prefer.

In hotels and restaurants, the woman follows the head waiter as he shows them to a table, the man following her. The woman seats herself in the chair which the waiter or her escort pulls out for her and pushes into place.

Invariably a man rises, if he is seated at a table with a woman, when another woman or man steps up to speak to any of his party; or if a late member of the party arrives.

At a restaurant dinner the woman gives her order to her escort at his suggestion and he delivers it to the waiter with his own. A man entertaining a woman at dinner expects her to select promptly whatever she wishes from the menu. She should make her selections without too much discussion, yet not hurriedly.

Her escort will follow her choice although it is unnecessary for him to do so. However, he must order corresponding courses in order to make the woman feel entirely comfortable while she dines.

If a man gives a dinner or luncheon at a hotel or club, the meal is often ordered in advance and therefore the guests are spared the responsibility of ordering, but when several persons are entertained informally at a public eating place with no opportunity for the host to plan beforehand for them, the guests may do their own ordering, at the host's suggestion.

SENIOR PLAY IS MAY 15 ATTRACTION

Regular rehearsals have been carried on for some time under the direction of M. C. Wagner for the Senior play, "Assisted by Saddle," to be presented in the High School Gym on Friday evening, May 15.
 "Assisted by Saddle" is not a one man play. There are twelve distinct individual characters, all major. Humor and action are prominent features. The practices now are being devoted to the development of poise of body, facial expression and response to situations.
 There will be novelty features between acts by groups of High school students and outside people.
 "Assisted by Saddle" is sure to be one of the dramatic successes of the season. Don't miss it.

SKELETON ROAD TO BE COMPLETED THIS WEEK

The County and City work is to be completed the latter part of this week on the Skeleton Road improvement. Corrugated iron culverts have been placed underneath the road to replace some of the old worn out wooden ones, which were unsafe and resulted in poor drainage. The fills are being completed preparatory to pouring in the concrete.
 It is planned to open for traffic the latter part of the week.

The water billing was completed the latter part of last week and bills mailed on Monday. These bills include only the months of May and June. There seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to this matter, previously the bills having covered a period of six months. This change of billing is in anticipation of the quarterly procedure which will go into effect July 1.

Stomach Agonized People
 Accept--A--Offer Today

Says Money Cheerfully Refunded if One Bottle of Dare's Mentha Pepsin Doesn't Stop Gas, Indigestion or Any Distressing stomach Trouble

Indigestion eating causes acute indigestion, gas, acidity, heaviness and sour stomach—sometimes the distended stomach causes that dreadful feeling of near suffocation.

Isn't it worth something to know of a remedy that will stop this distress in a few minutes quicker than anything else you can think of.

This is no common stomach remedy for it took years of time to combine Pepsin with Menthol and the other effective agents that make Dare's Mentha Pepsin so good that the worst cases of indigestion and gastritis and other chronic stomach ailments are speedily overcome and the most badly deranged stomachs are made clean, strong and healthy.

You can get one bottle of Dare's Mentha Pepsin and if after you take it you do not say it did your stomach more good than anything you ever used before, your money will be waiting for you. This is a straightforward offer and is so understood by Gladstone druggists and every druggist everywhere.

This delightful and effective elixir not only gives instant relief from gas, fullness, acid stomach and distress after eating, but taken regularly for a short time will turn your weak, run down stomach into a strong, healthy one able to perform its duties without help.

It ends indigestion, gastritis, catarrh of the stomach and does it in a surprisingly short period of time.

Indigestion eating causes acute indigestion, gas, acidity, heaviness and sour stomach—sometimes the distended stomach causes that dreadful feeling of near suffocation.

To Rescue Baseball In The Small Towns

From The Literary Digest
"Whistle up?" asks an interested on-looker as he views the "strangely paradoxical situation in America's national pastime, baseball."

Such men as Mike Sexton, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, commonly known as the "minors" is worried enough to think that a classification lower than "D" should be formed in order to include the very small towns which are being left out of the sport.

It is also noted that many high schools throughout the country have given up or are giving up baseball. This is due largely to the fact that the spring season is too short to enable them to run a schedule without interfering too much with studies.

There seems to be a move, also, in smaller colleges to abandon the game. Four schools Midwest Collegiate Conference, for instance, are reported in the press as deciding to do away with the game. One of them, Beloit College, has issued a confirmation of that report.

Without the game being pushed in the schools, there is a big gap in the things that help generate interest in the game, for many of the town's youth of other years have been the outgrowth of school baseball.

There seems to be another article to the situation in the small town, that perhaps has escaped the notice of the men who are in the organized game. That is the small town itself. Whether leagues of less classification than "D" will solve the problem is a question which brings up another query: Why did so many leagues of professional players in small towns go on the rocks last summer and the summer before?

The answer to the second interrogation is too great expense, which brings forth a third question: If present leagues can not survive, how may any new plan for professional leagues live? As Mr. Sinclair points out, the problem of expense underlies the whole discussion, and—cluding of course Willowdale, the nearest town and most bitter rival. Meantime, Willowdale was not sleeping and the same thing was happening in that proud municipality. Center played his game. So did Willowdale. Center was going along quite nicely, adding a player now and then and getting rid of one now and then. So was Willowdale. It was a process of weeding 'em out and strengthening the machine, a wholly natural proceeding. Sometimes one of the players got on his "high horse" and demanded more money. If proceeds at the gate were big enough and the player strong and popular enough, he got his boost in salary.

In time, the day came for the first great battle. Center looked over his team and compared it with Willowdale's. Nope, not strong enough. They called in the manager, showered him with money and told him to go forth and get the best pitcher and catcher in the nation. Play them under assumed names and against the rules of organized baseball, or of colleges, but get them! In retaliation, Willowdale did likewise.

Beat Willowdale! Beat Center! Don't care how; don't care anything about the cost; but beat 'em! There isn't any section of the country where, when that last "big" baseball feud, when the games are over and Willowdale's hired bunch of "stars" had beat Center's hired crew of "stars," the business men begin to get their. A bill here, a bill there, bills everywhere. They had a great time while it lasted; Center hated Willowdale and Willowdale hated Center; but look what it cost! A couple of thousand greenbacks in the hole and no chance of ever getting them back. Willowdale had the victory, but whose victory was it? The players got all the money and went home to laugh up their sleeves and prepare to bunk some other bunch of suckers next summer.

Sometimes it is whispered that the players on both the teams "accidentally" met up the road a few miles and split the proceeds all over again. While Mr. Sinclair admits that it is not always the same way in league towns, he says that there are "far too many instances where it is," and cites one:

That's small-town baseball as it has been year after year. It has come to the point where business men are seeing through the thing and taking inventory. Down in their hearts, they like the fellows in that other town. They don't want to feel angry with them all the year round and along about mid-winter they do forget about it.

About the next spring, the fans start thinking baseball again. With all the loss of money last summer, they think they're not able to pay the freight on another team. They let a year slip by without a club and if they've been hit extremely hard, they let two. Sooner or later, however, they itch for another team, and when the right and slick-enough promoter comes along, they fall just as hard as ever, only to go through the same experience over again.

In Southern Wisconsin, where in Janesville the writer gains a livelihood writing sports for a daily newspaper, this sort of thing went on last year after year. It did until the last loss in one of the towns was something like $15,000. That was too much and it cut off the flow of cash for any further venturing.

Then along came a man by the name of Mike Davy, who resides in the city of Watertown, long famous for its yonderful domestic "fattened goose. Mike knew enough about goose to know one when it was cooked and he considered this baseball goose was sort of overcooked.

Mike had an idea. For an old fellow—he's up around 70 now—he is unusually active in boosting athletics. He got that way perhaps because he had two sons going to the University of Wisconsin and he lived in the university town of Madison for some years.

Mike's idea was that all this expenditure of money for stars and all those deficits for teams every year were foolish. He turned his attention to the amateurs and played around helping them for a while. Then the big idea dawned upon him. He called it "home talent." He would have teams composed of home town boys.

He would pay these boys moderately and then form a league of the towns round about. That was three years ago and the result was the starting and the success of the Jefferson County Home Talent Baseball League. There were some minor drawbacks to the original circuit and the next year the Jefferson County loop was revised while other towns came in and others drop out. The thing had gone

MOTHER

If I were hanged on highest Hill, I know whose Love would follow me Still— Mother o' Mine. If I were Drowned in the deepest Sea, I know whose Tears would come down to Me— Mother o' Mine. If I were Damned of Body and Soul, I know whose Prayers would make me Whole— Mother o' Mine. Mother o' Mine.

along so nicely that a second wheel was started, the Southern Wisconsin League, and the writer had the pleasure of getting in on the ground-floor as one of the organizers and its president.

It was found that home talent set the bitter rivalry question. It created friendship between towns and has been doing it each year in larger measure. It has also created better business relations between the towns, for there has been much more harmony.

I speak of the Southern Wisconsin League because I know intimately of its workings. There were six towns in the organization the first year and the same number the second year. When the seasons closed, there was more good feeling between the towns than there ever had been for years. The competition continued hard, they let manlike rivalry, friendly and clean. Stranger than all was the fact that only two protests were entered at league headquarters in two years, and while one of the teams was a loser at the time, it took an adverse decision in good faith and is anxiously awaiting the 1925 season.

Here was the secret. Each town had entered the organization with an unlimited list of players to its own city limits or a radius of eight miles around those city limits. Where there happened to be two towns closer than eight miles, they were at liberty to draw their talent for a distance or half way between each other.

That ruling, as Mr. Sinclair tells us, "solved the problem of going out and buying players." In fact, "No matter how tight the race got—and it was a hot one last summer, for but one game separated the champions from the second place team; two were tied for third and two for fourth—there were almost as close—no matter how hot the race got, it was impossible to "load up." The teams just had to make the best of what they had, or could get in their own territory.

It was a radical departure, but the players were willing to try it out. Why shouldn't they? When a school gets into a pinch for talent, does it go out and hire the star of some other school? It does not. It uses what material it has and what coaching ability it has and makes the best of its material just like you and I do in our fight through life. We've got to get along with the ability we have and try to develop and make the best of our talents.

What of the fans? It was strange to them at first. They did talk some of arguing the managers to have the rule changed to permit the getting of stars from away, but they soon became accustomed to it. They soon learned that the team had to go through the stood in the individual players more than ever before. It got them to playing out their favorite players and sticking by them through thick and thin. It created more interest, for a fellow usually is more apt to boost for a man he knows than for one he does not know. Also, it caused the development of more players and created greater interest in baseball in the side, who now saw a chance that some day they might get the opportunity to play with the town team. That's one of the biggest things that has been accomplished, and it never entered into the original plan.

The player who covered third base for one of the teams in the Jefferson County Home Talent League gets a try-out with Toledo in the American Association next spring. Another lad who played outfield part of the season with one of the teams in the first season, became captain of a school team. Another pitched two nights, no run games for his college. Not so bad for the first two years.

Naturally, the type of baseball was not so expert, not so scientific, not so mechanical as that provided by highly paid men of exceptional individual ability. It couldn't be expected and the spectators soon learned it. It did give more interesting games. There is nothing more dull in many a baseball follower, especially the casual fan, than to see a team playing so well that the element of the unexpected is eliminated.

This is part of the attraction about home talent baseball. These players are more tense than the man who has learned the game so well that it is second nature to him. In home talent baseball there is no telling what might happen next, and that's just what the fans liked. The entertainment that was provided for them was greater than they ever got before because they learned not to expect perfect plays and they enjoyed the harder playing

Many Gladstone Folks Have Felt That Way
Feel all out of sorts? Tired, achy, blue, irritable? Back lame and stiff? It may be the story of weak nerves! Of toxic poisons circulating about, upsetting blood and nerves. There's a way to feel right again. Help your weakened kidneys with Don's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. Don's are recommended by many Gladstone people. Mrs. Roy Eagle, 523 N. Eleventh st. says: "I had the flu and when I recovered, my kidneys were in a miserable condition. I had constant backache and when I bent over, sharp twinges caught me across my kidneys. I had headaches and dizzy spells and at times everything seemed to be whirling in front of me. My kidneys didn't act regularly, either. I used Don's Pills from DeWitt's Drug store and they cured me." Mrs. August VanGysel spent Friday and Saturday with her daughter Mrs. Joe Stern of Escanaba. Follows who used to hire a hall now get things out of their system by broadcasting.

MUCH has been said of man's ingratitude to man. But how much more might be said of the lack of appreciation of Motherhood? In the paragraph above, Missed, expressed a good thought for next Sunday, May 19, to be observed in America as "Mothers' Day." At least once in the year, through a custom officially adopted in the United States by act of Congress in 1914, each one of us is reminded to give some thought to Mother. It is a beautiful tribute, and entered into with the proper spirit makes up in a small way for the ingratitude that so often is the Mother's lot. But Mother, with her heart of gold, expects but little. The wearing of a flower, white for the dead and red for the living, is the outward token of the thought given to Mother. The real tribute is that which mankind feels in its heart, and that tribute holds good every day.

MAYBE we did get a little snow this May. But so did the rest of the country south of us. And besides we hadn't discarded the winter coats.

THE Michigan Legislature that closed Saturday night probably did not pass as many measures as some of the preceding sessions. But time will probably reveal the important fact that its work was of more importance. The trouble in many sessions has been that each Legislator was anxious to throw a few pet measures of his own. Many such were proposed in the course of the recent session but to the credit of the members, most of the unimportant ones were left to lay in the pigeon holes of the committee rooms. The first important measure was the road financing program which called for the passage of the gasoline and weight taxes. This was given immediate effect and so far no particular group can claim to have made to suffer by its enactment. Wayne county got its reapportionment through giving it a representation more in keeping with its increased population. And the change in the primary school financing will later prove of great assistance to the counties with high school populations with low assessed valuations. That is the measure in which people of Delta county had reason to feel the greatest concern as it means considerable of a possible saving in school taxes, one that is not only desirable but justifiable by the conditions.

WEEKLY sermonette: A gossip tongue may be likened unto a forest fire—it takes little to start it and super-human effort to halt its devastating effects.

THE report of the Adjutant General of the Army shows that 50 per cent of the enrollments for the Citizens' Military Training Camps had been filled at the end of April in the Sixth Corps area, which includes the states of Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. The enrollment percentage was 78 per cent. Indications are, it is reported, that the 50,000 quota for all the camps will have been filled by the end of this month. The greatest number in former years since the war when the Citizens' camps were started. This means that the young men of the United States are taking to the idea of a month's training each summer, not necessarily for the purpose of preparing themselves for military service, but more because it is recognized that the training is beneficial, physically, mentally and morally. Young men between the ages of 17 and 24 years are eligible and information can be secured from the Commanding General, Sixth Corps Area, at 1819 W. Pershing Rd., Chicago, Ill. Of Delta county young men desiring to enter the camps may enroll with Attorney R. E. Johnson, this city. The camp at Camp Custer will be conducted from July 23 to August 21 this year.

THE article on baseball in small towns, mentioned last issue, is reprinted this week, as promised. It is not only interesting but instructive. It points the way to a settlement of the baseball problem in the small towns and cities. Gladstone and the other cities in the Upper Peninsula Baseball association are again this year following out the precedents of the past few seasons. Each city is planning every dollar it can get for the formation and upkeep of separate teams. Gladstone this year is to take another step at that game on that basis. We have promised the fans the best team in years. And that's what we're aiming to provide, because we think the fans are prepared to support such a team. If the crowds turn out to see the games, the contention will be proved correct. If they don't, this city and the others will have to come to be some consolation where cities have already reached—baseball in small towns must be on the amateur, or home talent basis. This year will tell the story for Gladstone.

MANISTIQUE offers the answer to "what's the matter with baseball?" That is, it's Manistique this year and some other city every year. There the fans are prepared to support such a team. If the crowds turn out to see the games, the contention will be proved correct. If they don't, this city and the others will have to come to be some consolation where cities have already reached—baseball in small towns must be on the amateur, or home talent basis. This year will tell the story for Gladstone.

THE Detroit Tigers have the strongest team in the American league on paper. Still the Tigers are getting walloped regularly. It took old Man Cobb himself to show the way on Tuesday when he fanned out three home runs, a double and two singles. Wednesday he came back with two more circuit drives that helped Detroit win another. Cobb has set another new record, which is especially noteworthy in view of the fact that he has not figured much as a home run hitter. His ability as a manager may be reasonably questioned, but not as an individual player. He has broken so many records in his 20 years of professional baseball that it takes an expert to figure them out.

GOVERNOR Grosbeck declares there is no place in a republican form of government (or a poet laureate and he vetoed the legislative measure proposing the establishment of such an office. In the days of old when knights were bold, court jesters were the usual thing. They helped keep the people in good humor while the king proceeded to extract the money from their subjects. Here in America we don't need jesters to make us come across.

AN editorial in a daily contends that the front pages of the daily newspapers are not as yellow as painted, because a survey by an expert "shows that ONLY 22 per cent of the front pages is being devoted to vice, crime and criminal procedure." That isn't very yellow, so the dailies say.

Current Comment From Reporter Exchanges

THE LOCAL NEWSPAPERS in spite of the fact that the metropolitan press now reaches into nearly every town and village in the country, the local newspaper in the United States is each year getting on a firmer foundation and becoming more and more useful to its home community. It may be said that the day of the metropolitan newspaper is at hand. This is true, but it is equally as true that the day of the local newspaper is here too.

For after all, it is the home news which is most important to most of us. We have the greatest interest in the community in which we live, and in the people who are our neighbors and friends. And it is the local newspaper which records the happenings of the folks at home, and in addition, fosters the civic pride and progressive spirit of the community. It is the home newspaper which boots the town year in and year out, which refuses to advertise the merchants in competition which takes the lead in every enterprise which has for its purpose the upbuilding and prosperity of the community. We frequently hear it said that the old-time independent spirit of the newspaper is gone, that its editorial policy is now subservient to the business office. Yet this is not true, there is some unselfish idealism in the average local newspaper than in any other business enterprise. I frequently speak out in the way which I believe will be for the good of the nation and regardless of what the consequences may be from a business standpoint. This is more than the average business man will do or can do.

OF course the local newspaper is now in a firm business basis. This is why it is improving from year to year why it is giving its readers a constantly better newspaper, and why it is increasing its influence for good in the community. But the local newspaper is still the principal booster for the community, and it does its boosting often without any hope of material reward.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest. Into the scene comes a young nurse, Miss Wentworth, probationary nurse, in whom Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She witnesses a violent outburst of her own, and makes a trivial blunder as a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster assumes her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning that she has lost her hope of a career as a nurse.

CHAPTER II.—Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by the doctor, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and re-engage her. She witnesses a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and another man who does not speak. CHAPTER III.—Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and others capricious and spiteful. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of great assistance to him. CHAPTER IV.—At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan meets Mrs. Myers, his secretary. She is a woman of a different type from the one whom she has met at the hospital. She is a woman of a different type from the one whom she has met at the hospital. She is a woman of a different type from the one whom she has met at the hospital.

come here when you employed me. She must have spoken more sagaciously than she knew, for the work of description was smothering her, and she felt that her position was becoming untenable. For an instant a glimmer of amusement passed over the doctor's face. "Why, Miss Wentworth, you are a regular spirit," he said. "Well, yes, it is true. My work at Avonmouth is not too exacting for me to do here frequently." "You knew you were coming, and you did not tell me. And you hinted at a patient requiring care. There is no patient, unless it is yourself. Doctor Lancaster, you engaged me for certain work here, and I am ready to fulfill it. It is not requisite that you should explain anything to me. But please give me the work you intend to do, and do not try to deceive me."

Lancaster, who had been regarding her with a certain interest, hurriedly into the hall before replying. A look of fear had come into his eyes. Joan knew that it was Myers whom he feared. There was something dreadful in seeing him cringe before the bully, this man who had, in turn, made other cringe before him. "Miss Wentworth," said Lancaster in a low tone, "believe me, I have no intention of deceiving you. On the contrary, it is my wish to confide in you. Will you come out on the porch and permit me to smoke?" She bowed, and they went out together. They took their seats upon two chairs at the end of the veranda. He was obviously nervous, and he was sure of it when you talked of your vocation. And I cannot trust anyone else. I have no opportunity—I broke off irresolutely and then went on, "I have had an opportunity of taking up that matter with the board yet," he continued. Joan knew that he was not speaking frankly now; but his next words were in the same tone of sincerity.

"This is the matter and that matter is all bound up together. You must see me before looking at me as I said to you when you came into the consulting room. I cannot explain any more now. I want help in the biggest fight of my life, and if I fail, I want you to witness that I have fought. I saw you and thought you would give me your help. For God's sake don't refuse me."

In spite of his sincerity the idea flashed through Joan's mind that his troubles might be the fancies of a sick man. "If I discharge you before the month is over, don't go. Refuse to go. No body can make you go. I am at the head of the institute. Ignore me. Stay!" "I'll stay," said Joan, and then, looking at his white face and trembling hands, she thought she knew what was the matter with him. "Listen, Doctor Lancaster," she began, laying her fingers on his arm. But then she saw that he was not looking at her. He was looking past her toward Myers, who was coming across the pasture toward the entrance. His expression was transformed. "Miss Wentworth," he said, with a sudden change of tone, "what was I saying to you? I am not myself at all today. I have been greatly overworked, and I am doing nothing at all. Of course you must remain your month, in case any patients come, and then we'll see what we can do about the position."

And, as Myers came up to them, the same hopeless, cringing expression came into his eyes. The secretary ignored Joan completely. "Well, doctor," he said, "I have the quarterly statement ready for you. Won't you come and look over it? I must have your signature, and you know how hard it is to obtain your own."

"Yes, I'll come, certainly, Myers," said Lancaster, rising. The two men went into the house together. Joan heard the door close behind them. She was not to be disturbed until that interview. She was conscious of two conflicting impulses: to leave, and to remain for Lancaster's sake. There was something about the man's pitiable condition that aroused her sympathies. But there was something about the whole place repulsive in the extreme. She must get allies in this blind fight against the secretary if she remained. Wilson, Mrs. Fraser? That was impossible as yet. At that moment she saw Doctor Jenkins driving up the path, and went to meet him. The boy sprang to the ground and raised his hat. "Good morning, Miss Wentworth. How is the doctor today?" he asked. "Doctor Lancaster looks very ill," she answered. "And Doctor Jenkins, I want to ask you—" "Fardon me, Miss Wentworth. Can I see Miss Myers?" "He is with Mr. Myers." "Jenkins has assumed an aspect of profound discouragement. 'Then I'll come back this afternoon,' he said, preparing to enter the buggy again. But he found Joan intercepting his passage. She had noted the look on his face, and she felt that she understood much which could be explained. "Doctor Jenkins," she said quietly, "Doctor Lancaster is unwell and I am when there's a rank." "Hush!" repeated Myers scornfully. "Who'd rush to this old place with the doctor's reputation?" "They do come, and the people trust him," said Mrs. Fraser, half crying. "You," scouted the other. "And the doctor still has his grandiose ideas about building up the institution—him that wrecked it."

"Well, that girl knows nothing, anyway." "I tell you she means to help the doctor in his crazy plan of notoriety. She means to undo all our work in his own interests," cried Myers vehemently. Joan walked away. She had overheard unwillingly, and enough to convince her that there was a mystery, with Myers at the bottom of it, and she had rightly sensed an enemy in him, and he in her. Now her mind was resolute to remain and fight for Lancaster. It was as if a decision, suddenly crystallized, had suddenly grown crystal-clear.

But she had not passed the entrance when the mistress's door swung open violently and Myers came out. He stood confronting Joan with his hand on his forehead. "Miss Wentworth," he began, "when you and I had our talk this morning you hadn't seen the doctor. You didn't know how things were situated, and I don't want you to see that I mean that the doctor needs a guardian. Well, I'm his guardian."

"I do not think that Doctor Lancaster needs a guardian, Mr. Myers," answered Joan, facing him steadily. "See here, now, Miss Wentworth," said Myers, swallowing hard. "You don't get the drift of things, but as I thought you might be trying to stand in the way of your work, when I'm only trying to reach a sort of working agreement to keep things in running order. That's my aim. Am I right?" "I don't know whether you are right. I think you are extremely unwell. Take off your hat," flashed Joan.

Myers removed the hat from his head and stared at her in astonishment. He could not understand her sudden initiation of hostilities. "Well, I reckon that's my nature, and I'm sorry," he said. He was trying to be conciliatory now. "I'm sorry to hear of your nerves, Miss Wentworth," he persisted, "but I wasn't brought up to be a ladies' man. However, I know my job, and I reckon you know yours. If you think I'm trying to stand between the doctor and you, come and see him right now."

"I have no complaint to make, and I have no objection," said Joan. "Come and see him," persisted Myers. "You're the nurse, and I guess it's up to you."

She looked at him, dismayed by his expression. "Doctor Lancaster worse?" she asked. "Well, nothing that I didn't expect, but he might be better," said Myers, answering. He walked toward the door of Lancaster's room and opened it. Through the aperture Joan saw Lancaster stretched out on a large chair, his head bent forward on his breast, his limbs immobile. She hurried into the room.

But Myers preceded her to Lancaster's side. He raised the limp arm and turned up the sleeve. Joan saw that the skin was densely scarred with tiny punctures. Lancaster was breathing heavily, and beside him, upon a little table, was a syringe, and near that a little bottle containing a few drops of a pale fluid. Joan drew in her breath quickly. It was what she had feared.

"Morphine," said Myers. "He always does this when he comes home. Now you understand what we are trying to get at this morning. Miss Wentworth, I'm responsible for him. It's my job to keep him straight if I can. When I can't, I try. Now you see, perhaps, why I lost his will power, and why I have to keep after him like a dog following his master. And I guess you won't think I'm trying to set him straight."

The bully in the man was coming to the surface again. He thrust out his hand toward Joan. "Because if you do, I may as well say, Miss Wentworth, I'm the boss here. Understand that?" he continued, with a blustering air. "The doctor lives all sorts of people like he's like this, and it doesn't mean nothing. He can't pay out no salaries unless my O. K.'s on the vouchers. We want a nurse, and if you like to stay on you can. But if you stay you help me so far as the doctor's concerned, and you do what I tell you. That's straight. It is clear as a glass."

Joan looked at him indifferently. "Help me put Doctor Lancaster on the bed," she said, "and then run and get me a hot water bottle." He obeyed her. And all the while Joan sat at Lancaster's side watching him, her mind ran over the questions that were pressing her. Why had Myers spoken of Lancaster as coming home, when he lived in Avonmouth? Who had hired him to be the doctor's keeper? And with whom had Doctor Lancaster been speaking so bitterly in his consulting room that evening when Joan called at the house?

Chapter VI

She sat for hours beside the sick man, conscious sometimes that Myers had come in and spoken to her. But she never answered him. As the pulse strengthened she let her mind work upon the problem again. Lancaster had taken an immense overdose, or (inconceivable in the ordinary morphine habitu, and he must have taken it during the brief period when Myers was with him; he must have taken it as soon as he got back to his room. Why had Myers permitted it?

At last Lancaster opened his eyes. His gaze fell upon Joan's face, at first without recognition, then with wonder. "Water?" he gasped, after a few ineffectual attempts to speak. Joan found a glass and gave it to him, and then another. Lancaster gulped down the liquid greedily. Presently he sat up, stood on his feet, and groped his way to the chair. "I'm sorry," he said, looking at Joan with a whimsical expression. "I should have told you."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am ashamed of you," said Joan. "God knows I'm ashamed of myself," he burst out fretfully. "Miss Wentworth, in the third drawer of that desk, beneath a pile of letters, you'll find a bottle—"

"No," said Joan decisively. She knew by the wholly unnecessary secrecy in the concealment, characteristic of the drug habit, that Lancaster had gone a long way down the slippery. "Miss Wentworth, you misunderstand me. It's an antidote for alcoholical poisoning. I was experimenting with a new drug."

Joan found herself sobbing, and she was astounded. It was the wreck of the man's moral nature that was unbearable. She saw the latest fitness in him, and it was as if the needless he was the voice of the morphine devil that spoke through his lips. Lancaster looked distressed. "Miss Wentworth, you had better leave me and go back to Avonmouth on the evening train," he said. "I ought never to have brought you here. It was purely selfishness on my part. Miss Wentworth, please don't cry. Go away now, and we'll talk it over before you start for the station."

"If I go away," wept Joan, "you'll take another hypodermic." "I pledge you my word of honor no," said Lancaster, with almost ingenuous candor. "I am really not accustomed to such a thing; that is why it knocked me out. I have been suffering from insomnia, and I tried a new antidote last morning, you know, but a derivative—the benefit of my patients."

The words came from his lips so glibly that Joan was almost convinced—would have been, had not the first lie been different. She hesitated. She had no intention of leaving the room, but she turned away. Lancaster misinterpreted her action. With incredible swiftness his hand shot out toward the little bottle. He had unlocked it and plunged in the syringe before the girl could snatch it away.

"Your word of honor!" said Joan. He leaned back in his chair and looked at her with a gasp. "Miss Wentworth," he said, "you are a nurse. Surely you are aware that I am not to be trusted, that my word of honor is worthless? That I am a creature of the devil, of the devil's agency? Don't you know that this accursed thing—the pointed toward the bottle—robs men of their honor and self-respect, and lowers them beneath the level of the brute?"

He spoke as if at a clinic, and quite impersonally; there was the shadow of a whimsical smile about his lips which twitched, nevertheless, with pain. "That does not refer to you," answered Joan. "You asked me to help you in the biggest fight of your life. Well, I am going to help you in that fight."

"It is too late," said Lancaster. "Never!" replied Joan valiantly. "You don't understand, Miss Wentworth. That's the mistake all people make in trying to cure us. Don't you know that a man or woman may be made a victim to a drug except from sleeplessness, or physical pain, or under stress of mental anguish? If you could make me the old trouble would still be there. I should fall a victim again. Life is worthless to me, Miss Wentworth," he ended, quite simply. "For haggardness, perhaps—I don't know. But not for duty. Your life is to be used, Doctor Lancaster, for the sake of the people, and I am going to help you use it. Your wonderful skill!"

He groaned at the words. Joan saw that, though he was suffering physically, there was some mental trouble which her words had evoked. "Doctor Lancaster," she said, "the first thing you have to do is to use your will. And I am going to give you your first test, a little one only. It will last thirty seconds. Can you put forth your will for just that length of time?"

He fixed his eyes anxiously on hers and nodded. Yet she saw them water toward the bottle. "I am going to cross the room," she said. "Don't stir a finger till I return."

But she had no time to think of this. She went back to Lancaster, whose hands were strained hard against the arms of the chair. "Well done," she said. "Miss Wentworth, I must have that hypodermic now." "I want you to wait. Wait half an hour, Doctor Lancaster." "I can't!" he cried, starting up. "I tell you I must have it. After an overdose one must have a smaller one. It will get me up nicely. Just half the quantity, Miss Wentworth."

"In half an hour," said Joan. He sprang to his feet, shaking and furious. "Give me that bottle at once!" "In half an hour," said Joan. "Lancaster sat down. 'Confound you, why ever did you come here?'"

"Well, Doctor!" she said. "I shall not go, Doctor Lancaster. We have covered that point in our conversation already."

Then, seeing his distress, she went on rapidly: "Listen to me, Doctor Lancaster. You brought me here upon an impulse, because you had no one whom you could trust. You wanted to fight and you wanted me to do it, and we are going to win." She took out her watch and laid it on the table. "In twenty-five minutes you shall have half a dose. Then we shall have won the first skirmish. O, Doctor Lancaster, fight like a man and help us win!"

She spoke with so much earnestness that she startled his enthusiasm. "Yes, we'll make the fight," he cried, with blazing eyes. "If only I had had you long ago!"

As another hangerover from Better English Week we are told about a teacher correcting a little girl who had just said: "I am going." "You must not say, 'I am going,'" she must say, "I am going." Then she added to impress the point: "I am not going. He is not going. We are not going. You are not going. Now, dear, can you say all that?"

The little girl nodded and smiled. "Sure!" she replied. "They ain't no body going."

(A Weekly Panorama of Events in the National Capital. By Peter Keegan for the Delta Reporter.)

THE STREETS OF WASHINGTON have been crowded during the past week with members of the many conventions which have been meeting here. The D. A. R. Congress opened this "convention week" followed by the Daughters of 1812, the Pan American Conference of Capital Cities, the League of American Pen Women and a convention of scientists at the National Academy of Arts and Sciences. The National Capital is rapidly becoming a "mecca" for big conventions. The Spring season is especially desired by the members of these various societies as the time for their meetings, however, because of the unusual beauty of the city at this time.

PLANS FOR THE FURTHER beautifying of Washington are being disussed by the Pan American Conference, whose members represent twelve countries, the majority of whom are interested chiefly in city planning. The beauty of the city was praised by the city planners, although they deplored that Washington should have for its background a "veil of black smoke." Especial interest has been taken in the activities of this conference by the Washingtonians who have had their attention called particularly to the betterment of their city recently, through the campaign conducted by Eldridge to straighten out the traffic problem here.

DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN THE Vice President and the Senate has not ended as was shown by Senator Moses' ridicule of Daws' attack on the rules of the Senate. Moses, President Pro Tempore of the Senate and member of the rules committee declared that he would not support any revision of Senate rules and predicted that Daws' efforts during the congressional recess would be practically fruitless. The New Hampshire Senator maintains that the present rules have successfully run the country for a century and that they have never kept any legislation which the people really wanted of the statute books.

COLONEL WILLIAM MITCHELL, former assistant chief of the Army Air service, who was demoted from brigadier general to the rank of colonel as a result of the recent fiery controversy between Navy and Air force, stated the other day, that he would continue his fight in a separate air service. The statement was made at a farewell luncheon given for him by friends at the Yacht Club here.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL McCARL, who became prominent in the recent battle to deprive him of his position in which he was victorious after a hotly debated outburst regarding the powers of the President, has come again before the public eye in his decision against the use of the Coast Guard funds in operating ships forfeited to the Government under the new act of Congress and which the Government hopes to place in service chasing the run-runners. His decision does not say anything about the right of the Coast Guard to operate such forfeited ships, however, and the treasury will proceed in their campaign against prohibition violators on the grounds that it can use money out of prohibition and customs appropriations to run ships under the command of the Coast Guard.

A MIGHTY LEGAL BATTLE is being fought in the Supreme Court in regard to the constitutionality of the Zoning law. This law, which divides the city into certain sections, some to be used for residential purposes, and others permitting business, and which is in use in almost all of the large cities of the United States is being fought in a test case by Mrs. Steerman of Washington, who wants to use her property which lies in a strictly residential zone, for business purposes. Her case is, that such a law is unconstitutional because it cannot be justified except under police powers and that it is not a proper exercise of police powers to state that all stores are a menace to the public health. The opposition maintains, however, that since the Constitution was framed living conditions have changed and that such conditions make the zoning of a city imperative to the welfare of its inhabitants.

AUGUST 15 ANNUAL FARMERS' ROUND UP

Saturday, August 15, was being selected as the time for the annual "get-together" for farmers of the upper peninsula at the state experimental farm in Chatham, Alger county. It is announced by G. W. Putnam, superintendent of the farm, who is directing arrangements for the event. The round-up day this year will follow the closing of the annual boys' and girls' club camp. This arrangement will permit parents who wish to attend the round-up to take their youngsters home with them. It will be the seventh annual "get-together," an event which every year has increased in popularity. The usual opportunity will be afforded for farmers to rub shoulders with their neighbors in their own county and with those in every county from Gogebic to Chippewa and from the copper country to St. Ignace.

Score another good point for prohibition. An English post refuses to come to America on account of it.

VAIL MEDALS GIVEN TELEPHONE WORKERS

MICHIGAN BELL HONORS SEVEN EMPLOYEES FOR OUTSTANDING ACTS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

RISKED LIVES TO SAVE OTHERS

Seven employees of the Michigan Bell Telephone company, four women and three men, have been awarded the Theodore N. Vail bronze medal for 1924. It is announced by Franz C. Rubin, president of the company. Letters of commendation for meritorious acts performed last year have been written eight others.

The awards were made for the performance of outstanding and unusual acts in the public service and in the application of practices and principles a knowledge of which was acquired in the line of duty. The medals are given as follows:

- Eula M. Diem, operator, Marine City.
- Yvonne E. Farman, operator, Marine City.
- Elsie A. Peitler, night operator, Mt. Clemens.
- Maxine Turner, operator, Carlton.
- Nathan C. Strong, plant man, Hilldale.
- Frank W. Mikolajaska, cable splicer, Detroit.
- James W. Ryckman, plant man, Detroit.

The citations announced by the Committee of Award, Theodore N. Vail Medal, show that in each case the act meriting presentation of the medal, while performed in the line of duty, was not required by duty but was inspired by unselfish devotion to public service and humanity.

Eula M. Diem and Yvonne E. Farman were working at their switchboards in the Marine City central office, early the morning of January 6, 1924, when fire started in an adjoining building. They noticed the city officials and fire department and business people whose properties were threatened, and called nearby towns or assistance in fighting the blaze, not until the central office was in flames, did the two brave young women leave their posts.

The suspicious actions of a bandit gang, attempting to gain entrance to building across the street from the Mt. Clemens telephone office at four o'clock in the morning of May 6, 1924, attracted the attention of Elsie A. Peitler, night operator at Mt. Clemens. She called the authorities, resulting in the frustration of the attempted burglary and the capture of all but one of the band of criminals. Maxine Turner, whose mother is the operating agent for the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. at Carlton, stayed at her switchboard, during the dark hours of the morning of July 25, and, by her calls to townspeople and to the fire departments of nearby communities for aid in a fire emergency, saved the business section of Carlton from destruction.

Nathan C. Strong, of Hilldale, in charge of service maintenance saved the life of a landlady, September 22, 1924. The woman's clothing had taken fire and Strong succeeded in putting out the flames. He was badly burned.

Frank W. Mikolajaska, of Detroit, saved the life of a drowning companion at White Lake, on August 8, 1924. The victim of the accident had gone down the second time before Mikolajaska could reach him. Artificial respiration, practice of which was learned in the telephone First Aid course, restored consciousness.

James W. Ryckman, hearing call of distress from the Clinton House, Mt. Clemens, the morning of July 4, rushed to the bank of the river, and seeing a woman's hair floating on the surface of the stream, plunged in and saved the life of the victim.

The eight letters of commendation, inspired by unusual performance in the line of duty but not sufficiently outstanding to call for the medal award, were written to the following: Lee O. Gallagher, lineman, Frank, for attempting to save the life of a fellow employee who was electrocuted when he touched a live wire.

Evelyn Wilson, operator, of Farmington, prompt action in a fire emergency. Joseph Wagner, formerly a cable splicer's helper, Detroit, for saving a little girl from probable drowning in the Fox Creek canal.

Andrew Johnson, installation foreman, Detroit, who, through the practice of artificial respiration, restored to consciousness a laborer employed by the Detroit City Gas Co., who had been overcome by gas in a trench.

Gordon L. Hunt, lineman, Detroit, for an act similar to that performed by Mr. Johnson.

Mrs. Clara Armstrong, operating agent at Athens, for prompt and intelligent action in connection with an attempted burglary. Sadie and Daisy Cairns, operators, Farmington, for prompt and intelligent action when the Farmington State Savings bank was held up.
