SCHOLARLY SQUIBBLES

There are three classes of stils, the beautiful, the intellectual and the majority.

Student—That recitation left me exhausted.
Prof. It should never have left you at all.

The most stirring passages ever written are to be found in a cook book.

Murder, Will Out
English Instructor, "Tomorrow we will take the life of Longfellow. Everyone come prepared."

SOLVE THIS YE FANS!

Horizontal—What Freshies chew incessantly.
Vertical—The fruit of certain trees, and sometimes, a dumbbell.

He copied my Algebra and Chemistry problems and I didn't say anything; he sat behind me in the show and read out loud, and I didn't kick; I took the name for sports balls that he threw and didn't get sore; he started parting his hair as I do, and purchased the same color necktie, and I kept still. The other night he took my girl home. Next day I gave him a six months vacation, with an ambulance and undertaker gratis.

A Minor Tragedy
The other night when I went to bed a brilliant idea came into my head. I decided to get up early next day, and prepare my Civics for the rest of May.

So I set the alarm clock for six (fifteen). Placed it under my pillow where it couldn't be seen.

I wanted to make sure that I'd hear it go off.

So I tolerated the tick like a companion cough.

Next morning I woke up, the clock was still there.

I cast my optics outside, the weather was quite fair.

Queerest of all, the sun was high in the sky.

"Gee, must be later than six," thought I.

I took the Big Ben out from under my head.

"Four minutes of eight," was all that it said.

Some folks are dumb, and not worth a darn.

Trouble was, I'd forgotten to wind the Alarm.

The Quizzical Questionnaire

This weeks question: Why do girls use powder?

Freshman—To take off the shine.

Soph—To be different and thus attract attention.

Junior—Cover up the freckles.

Senior—Because beauty is only skin deep, and if you save the surface, you save all.

Newspickups

Oral speeches in English II classes. One of the shining stars is the better that the Banquet scene in Macbeth is the most thrilling one because they have "cats."

Freshman—Why is it that they call it dinner at six o'clock? Why don't they say lunch or whatever it is?

Senior play went over big. Who says we haven't dramatic talent?

"Expert Topics" Pins received by several Seniors.

Senior Shortlanders have picnic to Bark River. Mike is strong on the cast.

Basketball girls have another reproduction of themselves taken at Esterson's for the annual.

Miss Johnson: Hiding, how do you spell paid?
Hiding Olson, after deep consideration, "P-a-y-e-d."

Miss Woessner: Why was Africa called the dark continent?
Isolores McGee: Because it was inhabited by black people.

Gilbert Olson doesn't seem to be able to study in chemistry class. Must be on account of the continuous chatter kept up by two junior girls directly in back of him. Also a mysterious itch tickles his neck, at intervals when his gaze is elsewhere.

Cruelty to Dumb Animals
A little Freshman was naughty in school. Sent to the Study Class with lots to do.

(A Weekly Panorama of Events in the National Capital, by Peter Keegan for the Delta Reporter.)

THE BIGGEST EFFORT ever made in the history of the world for the enforcement of a single law is the only adequate discipline of the campaign now being put on by the federal government to make prohibition effective on both land and sea. A real navy, armed to the teeth, is strung along the Atlantic seaboard to keep the rum runners from bringing their contraband cargoes into New York or Chesapeake Bay, while similar offensive warfare is planned along the Pacific Coast and the Gulf of Mexico. This great dry battle is being made at the express direction of President Coolidge, who has given his subordinate orders to go the limit in enforcing the Volstead act. Millions of dollars will be required to carry out enforcement program of prohibition officials, according to early estimates.

TAX REDUCTION legislation will feature the work of the next Congress. From every side are coming plans for reducing the nation's tax burden, while the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget are co-operating on a program designed to accomplish the same end through the reduction of Governmental expenditures. Estimates of the amount which will be slashed from the federal tax bill by the 69th Congress range from $350,000,000 to half a billion. The surtaxes on big incomes have come in for a great deal of criticism and a movement is on foot among members of the House Ways and Means Committee to eliminate them altogether by making readjustment of the income tax rates to bring in the revenue required by the Government.

THE WAR DEPARTMENT is up in the air over its plans for another national defense mobilization as a result of the President's refusal to approve plans for the military test on next Armistice Day, November 11th. The President's principal objection is that the test involves the expenditure of a considerable sum of money without adequate return that it is impossible for Army officials to determine through ordinary mobilization tests day just how well prepared the nation is for war without publicly displaying its for man power. It has also developed that information with regard to the preliminary plans for the test, set out in the newspapers before War Department officials were ready for publicity thus leading to additional embarrassment when the President put his foot down on the project.

IT HAS YET TO BE made clear whether or not a diplomatic error was committed by someone in the State Department when the United States failed to offer formal congratulations to Field Marshal Von Hindenburg upon his assumption of the office of President of Germany. Matters of this kind are usually taken care of in a routine way, but no cable went forward to Hindenburg on his inauguration day, and some displeasure was expressed in Germany as a result, according to reports received here. Having failed to send congratulations at first, the Government then had to wait until Hindenburg held his formal reception in Berlin for members of the diplomatic corps, when the American charge d'affaires joined with other Governmental representatives in extending best wishes to the second President of Republican Germany.

FRANCE AND THE United States are now moving toward an understanding on war debts and it is expected that a French commission will soon come to Washington to open negotiations for the payment of the four billion dollar French War debt. Jean Parmentier, who conducted the first French debt parley here two years ago, is in this country, but it has not been determined whether or not he is to represent his government in the new conference.

My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I certainly felt miserable and all out of sorts. After using three boxes of Doan's Pills from Erickson & VonToll's Drug Store, I was soon fixed up in good shape." 60c. at all dealers. Foster-Milburn

DO YOU KNOW? Rules of etiquette all should know.

The Engaged Girl and Her Fiance

The announcement of an engagement should be made by the parents of the young woman, or if they are dead, by her closest relative. The published notice generally runs something like this: "Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Turner announce the engagement of their daughter Miss Geraldine Turner to Mr. Willis George Anderson." If the father is dead, the mother makes the announcement; if the prospective bride is an orphan, her nearest relative or guardian vouches for the statement. Usually a girl notifies her intimate friends by note or by telephone before the public announcement is made.

Delightful affairs known as engagement dinners and luncheons are made the occasion for telling the news. These parties are most successful when the announcement is a complete surprise to most of those present. Newspaper announcement follows this event.

As in the case of a wedding, the man is congratulated on his good fortune, while to the girl is given wishes for great happiness and joy. A girl is not congratulated. This distinction is one to be remembered.

Close friends present to the girl engagement gifts which may be entirely personal, differing in this respect from the wedding present, which should be something which both may enjoy. When a girl and a man become engaged, it is necessary for the man's mother to call on the girl and her mother, even if they never have met. Naturally, the caller is usually accompanied by her son.

After the engagement has been announced, the girl, if she lives in another town, may visit her fiance's mother and sisters at his home. This is advisable because it gives the man's parents an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the woman who is to enter their family; and because it gives the girl a chance to know her future relatives-in-law. The invitation for such a visit must come from the man's mother or married sister, if the latter is to be the hostess.

The fact of an engagement does not permit any lack of reserve between a man and a girl. Exhibitions of affection in public are not forbidden by any rule of good form; nevertheless, no person of refinement cares to make a demonstration of his finest feelings for the edification of the general public.

If the engagement is broken, it is imperative that the girl return the engagement ring to the man, as well as other gifts and his letters to her.

The man must immediately return the girl's letters and photographs to her. There is no exception to the rule for either person.

Next issue, "Gifts for Many Occasions." From McCall's Service Bulletin.

Walls that Interest and Entertain. A child's room may be made more attractive by finishing the walls with pictures. A very pretty one is easily made from unbleached muslin. Take a strip of cloth half as long as the circumference of the room and tear it in two lengthwise. Before tacking it up where you desire it, outline panels upon it with an ordinary black coloring pencil, using a yard-stick for a guide. After tacking it up with brass headed tacks, paste lovely pictures out from covers and advertisements, in the panels, and the result will be gratifying.

You Can Make Pimento Cheese. Pimento cheese requires one pound of cream cheese to one good sized pimento. Mash the cheese with a fork, add two tablespoons of cream and the pimento. When thoroughly mixed, put it away in a cool place. The cost of making it is much less than when bought ready made, and it is even better than the prepared cheese.

All vegetables contain many of the tonic and laxative properties included in that dosage that in former years was a harbinger of spring. As a sign of the times and a better knowledge of nutrition and right eating for health, it is interesting to note that "You need a spring tonic for that tired feeling," has changed to "Eat vegetables for vitamins." When you want to cook rice, put a tablespoon of butter in kettle first and let it melt, then put in your water and when boiling put in your rice and you will find it will not stick to the kettle, even though you don't stir it at all.

Corn and Hamburger. One can of corn and 1 pound of hamburger stirred together with an egg well beaten, and seasoned with salt, pepper, and butter, to which a little milk is added if necessary (you have to use your own judgment; some corn has more moisture than other brands). Bake for two hours in a slow oven, and you have a very nice meat loaf.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Nurse!—A hospital at Avonmouth, managed by the eminent treatment of them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest. Miss Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster is accused of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action raising the end of her hope of a career as a nurse.

CHAPTER II—Without relatives or friends, and despondent, Joan, urged by friends, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reneatrate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see.

CHAPTER III—Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others suspicious and bullying. He tells her she can be of "great assistance" to him. Doubtfully, Joan accepts. A man whom she hears called Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he overtly threatens her.

CHAPTER IV—At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institution is a Mrs. Dana, demoralized but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place.

The HOUND slipped the key in the lock before answering. "I don't know, Doctor Lancaster," she answered. "The lock's all right. It couldn't have been broken. And I swear I locked it last night. Somebody must have let her out."

"The Hound!" began Lancaster, but Joan interposed.

but Joan interposed. "She may have found a key," she said.

The matron took her head. "No key would fit that lock, except the right one," she answered.

"Why should anyone tamper with that lock?" Lancaster muttered, suddenly he broke down and covered his face with his hands. His shoulders shook convulsively. Joan put her hand on his arm.

"Doctor Lancaster, you must go back to your room now," she said. "It was nothing, and it is all ended."

"Miss Wentworth, if you will stay with me till six it will help me to master myself. It is not the wear of yielding to morphine; it is my thoughts. If you knew how one's life comes crowding upon one in the darkness—"

"I'll stay with you," said Joan.

"Let us wait on the veranda," said Lancaster. "The air is stifling in this house. Put on a wrap and I will wait for you there."

Joan ran upstairs and slipped on her cloak. When she got back Lancaster had not moved from the door. The secretary was packing noisily in his room.

They went outside together, closing the front door behind them, as if to shut in the evil influences in the place. There was a hint of morning in the air, in its freshness, in the paling of the night above the eastern mountains.

Lancaster led the way toward the chairs at the end of the veranda and wiped the dew from them with his handkerchief.

"When you came here," he said, as they sat down, "when on the impulse I asked you to come here, I did not know that my impulse was the prompting of my good angel."

"You said I was your good angel," said Joan lightly.

"It was more than chance," said Lancaster, looking at her. "The best thing that has ever come to me."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am only too glad to have had the opportunity of being of service. It is what every nurse would be happy to do."

"No," he corrected her. "You have brought more than service into the institution. Do you know what you have brought? Hope!"

She could hardly restrain her tears so deeply was she moved. She put her hand upon his. "Doctor Lancaster, it must never leave you again," she answered. "Lift up your eyes and look at the hills. How can one help but hope? Hope lies all about you."

"When a man lives in darkness," said Lancaster gravely, "he cannot lift up his eyes. I was broken long before I became a victim of that deniable devil. I fell into the hands of unscrupulous men. I had nothing to live for. I dwelt in shadows, hardly knowing the dream from the reality, and all the men and women about me seemed like shadows until you came. I could endure my life only because of its unreality; it was like a dream, a nightmare, which, I knew, could not last forever."

She did not answer, and he remained silent for a long time. It began to lighten. Streaks of saffron appeared against the top of the hills. A bird awoke and called; another answered her.

"But this is hope," said Lancaster, taking Joan's hand. "You have brought it to me, and I am never going to lose it again. I am going to win my fight against the drug, and then I am going to regain all else that I have lost."

He seemed upon the verge of a revelation, but he said no more. And now the day was dawning.

The hall clock struck six. Joan looked at Lancaster. His face was twisted with pain, his lips were bloodless from compression.

"You are making a splendid fight," Doctor Lancaster, she said. "Now you shall have your hypodermic."

He rose up eagerly, and she could see the sweat on his forehead as he was undergoing in the trembling of his limbs the eager look in his eyes. They went back into the house. A light still shone in the secretary's room, but no sound came thence. At the door of Lancaster's room he stopped.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "I have something to say, and something to promise. Tomorrow, perhaps, but not now. If I take it and free my body from this suffering, I lose my soul again. I lose that hope which you have given me. And I want to give you this."

He handed her a little bottle of morphine, three-quarters full.

"It is the bottle which you took from the drawer of my desk yesterday," he said. "I stole it from your pocket when you leaned over me last night, when you told me I was winning. I was a thief—but I am a penitent thief, and I restore it intact."

"No, Doctor Lancaster," answered the girl, smiling as she took the bottle from him. "That has no bearing upon your character; it was a symptom of your disease."

"Well, I didn't take any," said Lancaster with the transient flash of humor lighting up his face. "I had the hardest conceivable battle over that bottle. I set it up before me, and it held my right hand back with my left, and I said, 'I am winning, in Joan Wentworth's name.' And at last the drug devil was beaten. And no more morphine until tonight."

"Doctor Lancaster, you have been brave and wonderful!" cried Joan, profoundly stirred. "Remember that! One of the bravest men I have ever known. Never tell me again that you have lost your power of will. We are winning fast."

He placed his hands upon her shoulders and stood looking at her. Upon his face was an expression of indulgence, as if he was considering her enthusiasm in the light of his experience of life so much deeper than hers, so much the more profound. Then the look passed; the years seemed to fall from him, and strength came into his face.

"God bless you, my dear," he said, and bent and kissed her forehead.

She turned and ran upstairs. Her heart was singing in her breast. The flood of sunlight that came through the eastern windows, illuminating the dusty interior of the old building, seemed like a spiritual light, flaming into this dark place where shadows had dwelt so long. She went into her room and dressed for the day. She had never felt so happy before. And now the life of Avonmouth had become as dim as a dream, and she cared no longer whether she returned or not. A charge had been granted to her, a man's life put into her keeping; that trust she meant to fulfill.

She had saved Lancaster, and she would outwit Myers, and remove the only obstacle to Lancaster's recovery. She knew the man indicted the doctor to drug himself. She would have known that even without the matron's statement to her. But why should Myers wish Lancaster to drug himself to death?

He must be acting for others. Whom? No matter. Once the drug evil was overcome, the plot would be revealed and overthrown.

As she stood at her window Joan heard footsteps on the path below. Looking down, she saw the secretary leaving the house, carrying a bundle. Her heart almost stood still. Surely Myers had not acknowledged defeat and taken Lancaster at his word? Surely he did not mean to go without another struggle?

When he finds his home swept and garnished?"

"Doctor Lancaster, he has no hold on you. He can do nothing, and he will never dare to return."

"Wait, my dear, we have a respite, at all events," Lancaster answered. "So let us eat our breakfast, and afterward I'll take you for a ramble through the woods, and we'll hold the fort together until evening."

Chapter VIII

By the next morning there was no doubt that victory had been won. There was color in Lancaster's face, a lightness in his step; and, best of all, he was peacefully whole. The drug devil still clung to the nervous refuges of its physical domain, the hands still trembled, the man started at sudden sounds; but his shifty, furtive, lying spirit had taken its departure.

Joan only discovered afterward that Lancaster must have endured the treatment had been more heroic than Joan had known, with her own limited experience, and the antidotes which she administered, under Lancaster's own direction, were purposely limited, for fear of supplanting one habit with another.

Lancaster had gone through the worst of his ordeal; and yet certain features of his illness were puzzling to both of them. The symptoms of morphine poisoning, shiver and prostration as they were, seemed to be irreconcilable with those classically accepted. There was Lancaster's complete prostration on the morning when Joan discovered the nature of his ailment. He told her afterward that he had been conscious all the time, but physically inert, as if paralyzed. That did not point to morphine poisoning. And a certain lethargy remained one of the last symptoms of the case.

The intimacy of the sick room, born of their struggle, had become the most natural thing to both of them. The passing of Myers had wrought an extraordinary change in the atmosphere of the institution. And somehow the new life of Lancaster's recovery had spread into Millville. Joan inferred that even the country people had boycotted the institution, but now two mothers brought their babies to Lancaster, and it was amazing and delightful to Joan to see the doctor's transformation, his jolliness and tenderness toward the children.

"I'm asking my respite," he said whimsically. "I want to get well to face my harder battle."

"It is no respite," answered Joan. "You are free now, Doctor Lancaster; it is only a habit of thought that holds you."

There ensued three wonderful days after the secretary's departure, always to remain clear in the girl's memory. They were three days of uninterrupted recovery. After the second no more morphine was given. The fight was won; there was no questioning that.

"I suppose you will have to return to Avonmouth soon," Joan suggested. He turned a startled look on her. "Yes—soon," he said, and fell into a gloomy meditation from which she could not arouse him.

That afternoon a telephone message came from Thompson, a hill village, fifteen miles distant. A farm-hand had been crushed by a falling tree; would Lancaster come at once and see if anything could be done for him?

"Would you like to come with me?" asked the doctor.

"If I can be of help."

"Of course you can—the greatest help. I shall need you badly, perhaps."

She watched him cross the grass beside the chicken coop to where the weed-grown path joined the winding road. He was outside the grounds of the institution now, and he was still going in the direction of the station. He disappeared behind the hedges, appeared again, a long way off, and vanished finally. He was gone, and the air seemed the sweeter, the day more joyous.

Joan almost danced downstairs to the dining room. Lancaster was at the table, waiting for her.

"Mr. Myers has gone away," she cried. "Doctor Lancaster, your spirit has departed, sulfurous and all."

Lancaster looked at her gravely. "I know," he said.

"Did he come to you? Did you discharge him?"

"He did not come to me. He did not tell the matron he was going. It looks bad."

"No," said Joan firmly, struggling against her conviction. "He was afraid. You will never see him again."

"You know what the Bible says about the unclean spirit who leaves a man, and returns with seven others."

They traveled for the most part in silence.

to administer an anesthetic," he answered.

Lancaster telephoned to Jenkins the buggy, and half an hour later they were driving along the country road into the heart of the mountains. They as steady as the steel instruments he held, his deftness and precision were amazing; and when at last the operation was ended, and the patient's recovery announced as probable, she could not conceal her enthusiasm.

They were to remain at the cabin overnight in case of a change for the worse, returning to the institute in the morning. After a scrappy meal they had wandered to the end of the village, toward a patch of woodland that was encroaching on the tiny settlement. The long summer twilight still held the land, although the mountain tops were already vague and shadowy. They stood there, looking down toward the level country under them.

"I think you are the most wonderful surgeon in the world," said Joan. "And you see I didn't faint this time," she added.

"Faint? Why should you faint?" asked Lancaster, looking at her with a puzzled expression.

"You seemed to regard my weakness in the operating room as a sign of my incapacity," she replied, a little chagrined that he should have dismissed the matter from his mind.

Lancaster looked at her with that strange glance which seemed always designed to hide his thoughts. Then his face softened.

"Joan, do you know that I owe everything on earth to you—to me, my dear?" he asked.

"And he took her in his arms and kissed her."

"That's what you mean to me," he said. "I can't lose you; I want you to fill the life that you have given back to me."

And at the touch of his lips on hers Joan knew that in truth she loved him; all that she had heard of the man's past, his dissolute life, the talk of Avonmouth, was forgotten. She only knew that she loved him, not with the wild passion of which she had heard, but with a quiet and abiding fondness, none the weaker for its qualities of calmness; and it was the most natural thing in the world that she, who had given him life again, should give her own life also to this wonderful, strong man who had risen above his wrongs and driven the besetting devil from him by valiant strength. Her heart was lifted up; serene and trustful she returned his kiss.

"I love you, too," she answered.

"Nothing of the past shall ever come between us."

CHEVROLET MAKES RECORD IN APRIL

Two new records were established by the Chevrolet Motor company during April. Retail Chevrolet dealers in the United States broke all previous monthly records by selling during April an aggregate of 53,383 cars. The next largest retail sales month was April of 1923, the automotive boom year, when 51,848 Chevrolets were sold. The other new record was made on April 30 when a total of 4,664 cars and trucks were shipped from the various Chevrolet factories, the largest number for one day in the history of the company. During April, Chevrolet retail salesmen obtained 59,596 new orders, the remainder of the delivery total for the month being used to take care of a small portion of unfilled orders carried over from March. At the end of April, 36,512 unfilled orders still were on hand throughout the United States.

When A Cough Is Stubborn It--

This Week's Health Talk No. 1
by P. J. Mellon, D. C.

When a cough is stubborn it means that the time for experimenting with it is past. A cough with a raise of mucus from the lungs may be the forerunner of tuberculosis. It should be eliminated at once by removing the cause.

Weakness in the bronchial or lung region of the body is due to spinal bone displacement in the upper dorsal region of the spinal column. If a cough is stubborn and cannot be thrown off as easily as you have thrown off other attacks, it is as good a danger signal as the on-coming of the white plague, tuberculosis, ever gives. The thing to do is to see a chiropractor at once and start a course of spinal adjustments to remove the cause. The record of chiropractic in the influenza epidemic was many times better than that of any other healing method and that record is equally good in other varieties of lung and bronchial troubles. There is no substitute for chiropractic.

BRONCHIAL TROUBLE YIELDS

"After attempting for some time to rid myself of a disagreeable bronchial cough which threatened to be the forerunner of worse trouble, I turned to chiropractic. In the course of one month of adjustments the ailment gradually disappeared, and now my affliction has completely left me."—A. A. Ladley, Chiropractic Research Bureau Statement No. 1375—

The lower nerve under the magnifying glass is pinched by a misaligned joint. Pinched nerves cannot transmit healthful impulses. Chiropractic adjusting removes the pressure. The upper nerve is free as nature intends.
