Chats with The Editor

ARTHUR D. WOOD, former probate judge of Alger county, publisher of the Mining News and now commissioner of pardons and paroles for the State of Michigan, has received considerable praise for the manner in which he has administered his department.

The appointment of Mr. Wood probably was Governor Green's most sagacious appointment, if indications thus far are borne out.

Nearly every paper in the state has commented editorially upon the work Wood is doing.

READING about the welcome extended, properly. The German-Irish crew of the Bremen, first airship between Europe and America, any citizen of the United States is glad to note the wonderful manner in which only a few years have healed the breach of the World War.

The chain of doing things comes in for argument in regards to some lines of business, but there are few who will attempt to attack or belittle the tendency to place first-class hotels in charge of operating companies.

Milwaukee did itself proud in the preparations and the way they were carried out. The city was decked out in gala colors, the American, German and Irish flags being in evidence everywhere.

The fliers are being received royally in every city they are visiting, and the genuineness of this reception can hardly be doubted after witnessing that extended by the people of the city of Milwaukee.

MENTION of Junesau Park brings to mind the mental note made of the wonderful improvement made in that section by the city of Milwaukee.

There have been numerous complimentary remarks about the improvements noticeable in Gladstone. Last summer the down town section was "dolled up" in several spots, and many residential sections have been beautified by improvements in the neighborhood.

CONTRARY to the popular belief, our First President was not a "party" man. In the "Life of George Washington," by John Marshall, (which by his way is good reading for any citizen interested in the history of government) we learn that the Nation's chief executive viewed with alarm the tendencies of his day to divide political opinion along partisan lines.

Those who wished to see the landing, we became "air-minded" for the time being and when we received an invitation to take a flight there was no hesitation. Yes, it is quite a thrill to fly the first time, but so far as the ride making one the least fretful or doubtful, our impression would be that it is not nearly so awe-inspiring as the first ride on a "figure 8" when the roller-coaster brings you around to the first 80 degree drop.

That was the sensation that surprised us most for we had anticipated judging the speed just as we would travelling by auto. When instead the plane seemed to be standing still, our inclination was to hold our breath lest we find ourselves thumping back against the old mother earth.

that the reason the plane seemed to remain long over one spot was because the pilot had taken a rather sharp upward course. And you can't tell the speed by catching the clouds.

Travelling over Milwaukee, Bay View and around Cudahy, one is astonished with the pretty view obtainable from the air, comparable to nothing seen here.

It is now just another short step in the direction of the progress we are making.

SCHOOL ELECTION THE ADVANCED

J. T. WHYBREW AND ONEIL D'AMOUR NOMINATED FOR BOARD

The election of school trustees and the transaction of other business of the Masonville township schools will be held on Monday, June 11. A number of changes were made in the school laws by the state legislature of 1927, the most important one affecting local conditions being the elimination of the annual school election and the holding of a school election on Monday in June. Qualified voters are not required to register again if they have already done so in the past and have not voted elsewhere since registration. Those who have not registered must do so to qualify them to vote. Voting booths will be located in the town hall and the annual business meeting of the school board will also be held there. A person to vote at a school election must be a tax payer or have children of school age. A trustee must be a tax payer. The new law makes no change in the raising of the school budget. The amount of money deemed necessary for school purposes is levied by the school trustees at the annual meeting. The budget for the next school year is raised by the trustees themselves at the annual spring meeting and the question was brought up at that time as to the law regarding the raising of money for school purposes. Mr. Whybrew, J. Miller explained the matter to all present giving them a better understanding of it. It is believed by many tax payers that the money levied should be voted by the qualified voters and not by the school trustees. The legislature of 1928 may change the existing law in this respect to meet the approval of the people. There is one vacancy to be filled, the term of Oliver H. Neveu expires July 1. Mr. Neveu will not be a candidate for re-election. One who has wanted for some time past to be relieved of his duties on the school board but who was elected by his fellow members to continue until the expiration of his term. He has been a member of the board for several years and has always taken an active part in school affairs. Two petitions have been circulated to fill the vacancy on the school board. A petition for Mrs. J. Whybrew of Oter was circulated some time ago and last week a petition for O'Neil D'Amour was circulated. Mrs. Whybrew has taken an active interest in township and school affairs particularly in her home district. Mr. Neveu is not making an active campaign his friends circulating the petition and working in his behalf. He is an experienced bookkeeper and an employe of the Northwestern Co-operative and Lumber Co. at Gladstone. He is a graduate of the high school and has always taken a deep interest in school affairs. It is not known whether or not more petitions will be circulated. The petitions must be presented to the secretary of the school board not more than thirty or less than fifteen days before June 11. H. A. Harris, a trustee of the board has been appointed treasurer to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation as treasurer of Carl L. Pearson who has moved to Gladstone, Wis. Mr. Pearson resigned only as treasurer but not as a member of the board so that he is eligible for other than the one caused by the expiration of Mr. Neveu's term. TO ATTEND ALUMNI BANQUET Harry Buchman accompanied by Peter D'Amour, Jr. as a guest will leave Saturday for Marquette to attend the Michigan State College U. P. Alumni banquet to be given that evening. Coach Kinko, famous football player, will be the principal speaker at the banquet which is expected to draw a large number of M. S. C. graduates and guests from all parts of the U. P.

BASEBALL LEAGUE MAY BE FORMED

Baseball will continue to be the grand old American game in Rapid River this year according to Harry Buchman who is calling a meeting of players and fans on Sunday. A good attendance is urged because of a number of important matters to be discussed and all fans are wanted to be heard on the subjects. One matter to be discussed will be the possibility of organizing an amateur league to embrace Ternary, Rock, Nabua and Rapid River. These are the towns in which the most friendly rivalry exists and it is this rivalry that counts in the gate receipts. The players are "raring" to go and the weather is perfect so that a little Sunday afternoon pastime will be in order. It's up to the fans to start the ball rolling and the players will keep it going after that. Play ball!

L. WHITE WAS ACCIDENT VICTIM

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD WEDNESDAY FOR MAN INURED BY BLAST

Delorme L. White, 69, a resident of this village for the past thirty years, passed away Sunday morning at 6 o'clock at the Lansing hospital, Escanaba, where he had been treated Wednesday evening suffering from injuries sustained while blasting stumps on his farm near Oter. Mr. White was clearing some land with his son-in-law, John O. Johnson. Mr. Johnson was quite a distance away at the time of the accident but following the report of a blast of dynamite heard cries from Mr. White and rushed over to him to find Mr. White terribly injured from the explosion. The exact cause of the accident will never be known because Mr. White soon lapsed into unconsciousness and remained so except for a short period of time Friday. It is believed he had placed a charge under a stump and while in a stooping position there was a premature explosion. Three fingers of each hand were amputated and he suffered severe injuries about the face and chest. Mr. White was widely known throughout the district, having been engaged in the grocery and meat business many years ago in the present L. E. Scott grocery store and for the past twenty years he was engaged in lumbering and farming. He was also prominently identified with local and township political affairs for many years. He is survived by his widow and one daughter, Mrs. John O. Johnson of this village; also the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. John Watkins, James A. White, of Detroit; Lester White, of this village; Mrs.

This plot of about one acre was planted several years ago by the school children under the supervision of state officers as an experiment to watch the feasibility and development of the growing of spruce, pine and other trees on cut-over and sandy soils. The small trees were planted several years ago but did not do well the first year because of an exceptional dry season. They have fared better during the last two years and it is believed that one quarter of them are in a flourishing condition.

The picking of the evergreens was begun in this district a few years ago by Mr. Gifford and during the spring and fall seasons gave employment to a large number of men and some women who not only derive a revenue from the picking but also enjoy the out-of-doors employment. A price of four to five cents per pound is paid the picker and the average picker will pick one hundred or more pounds a day.

Twenty champion best growers, selected from the state at large on the basis of efficient production, will be given recognition in connection with a new "five acre beet contest" which is being sponsored by the Michigan State College. More than 100 of the state's leading growers have already entered the friendly competition, according to officials of the M. S. C. extension service, and it is expected that many more will get in before the entries close June 18. It is the first contest of this kind ever held in Michigan. Gross returns will be computed on a basis of the average price paid for the 1928 beet crop in the state. Yields will be determined carefully, and beets must have a sugar content equal to the average for the state or yields will be discounted.

THE GREAT MAIL ROBBERY

 From The Play "THE GREAT MAIL ROBBERY"

SYNOPSIS
 Lieut. MacReady and Bill Smith are in Yellow Canyon to arrest a gang of mail robbers. Bill makes friends with the gang leader, the town sheriff. MacReady is warned against Philip Howard, finds evidence and has him arrested. He escapes and is admitted to the care of Captain Davis, leader of the train bandits. The gang goes to a wild canyon to intercept the train, and Mrs. Davis is interviewed by Spofford, supported by Bill. Lem is asked to go down to the canyon. Meanwhile the bandits have attacked the train, and the few marines on board are slowly losing. Howard detaches himself from the bandits and runs towards the cars.

It was a matter of life and death that he should locate the lieutenant, but there was no answer. Hungry Jake had detached himself from the others and joined Howard. The two crawled under the entire length of the mail car on their stomachs, dodging observation and hoping for a break that would let them reach their destination safely.

The light had degenerated into a general battle with each man for himself. The Marines were handicapped by the fact that they were shooting from odd angles at a foe concealed in rock crevices. The bandits, now that their first surprise rush had been frustrated, were resorting to snipping a method of warfare in which they were only moderately successful due to the barrier of wood that screened the soldiers.

Hungry Jake passed Howard in his eagerness to attack. While Howard was climbing the platform only to find the door locked. Hungry Jake was having better luck on the side.

"Safe from the marines' fire he was able to experiment with the lock inside and, when it failed to open, he shot it away with one explosion from his .38.

Inside the radio operator was getting off his message. At the first sign of trouble he had turned himself at the machine and used the dots and dashes that would summon help from the aero-plane station eighty miles away. He was sending in a pre-arranged code, giving the location of the train.

With his message almost completed the explosion on the lock of the side door warned him that he was to be the center of the fighting. Gammely left his instrument, grabbed his automatic and started to investigate.

At the same moment Hungry Jake's ugly face made its appearance behind a vicious looking weapon. Both guns barked at once. Hungry Jake's face did flash and Judy flop and disappeared completely drilled through by a marksman that had attacked a man in the service. But if Jake's finish had been thorough, so had his own aim. The operator sank to the floor his grey flannel shirt changing to red as life's blood flowed from a pierced artery.

He was conscious of a form coming to his aid and standing beside him at the open door.

"Got message through, help coming, airplane," he muttered.

Then he collapsed completely.

The figure at his side stooped to help him and saw that he was badly hurt. He straightened up at the side of the operator, that moment a rifle shot rang from the cliff above. The figure jerked spasmodically and sank into heaven. Even then it refused to give up. Painfully it crawled and twitched its way in the direction of the radio instrument.

Howard, following in Hungry Jake's footsteps, saw the bandit's crumpled body outside the radio car. He peered in cautiously from an angle. The sight of the dead operator on a line with the edge of the door gave him an insight into what had happened.

He had looked over his shoulder for a sight of MacReady but now he was ready to do the job alone. He raised himself into the car. Sure of his safety inside he stopped a moment to adjust himself to his surroundings and then closed the side door behind him. There was a trunk in the car, a chair and some odd furniture. Working with desperate frenzy, Howard pulled the trunk against the door to prevent interruption.

When he had completed the job sent the message, but he wanted to make doubly sure. His fingers strained for the sender.

"Only then did he become aware of another figure that had climbed in and was at his side. Through dimmed eyes he recognized Howard.

"I knew you could count on you," he muttered.

Howard shoved him aside in the chair but made him comfortable. Howard's fingers began to play the sender.

"Didn't get a chance to warn you, he interjected. "I was watched too closely."

Outside the light had become general. A baffled cry of rage from the bandits who had tried to follow Howard into the radio car told of his discovery that the door was closed and blocked by the impediments he had piled up.

Howard heard Davis' irate voice demanding to know the reason for their failure to enter the radio car. An answering shout told him: "The damned soldier got away."

"Get some one in there and kill that message," Howard heard Davis reply.

Copyright, 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. Deioras Synopia in "OLD SAN FRANCISCO" in a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

Synopsis
Don Hernandez Vasquez and his beautiful granddaughter Dolores occupy the old Vasquez ranch handed down from the first Vasquez, a grant from the King of Spain. The prosperity that came to San Francisco by the discovery of gold in California missed the Vasquez hacienda where incident was did not keep almost of modern progress. But the Vasquez area are coveted by Buckwell, political boss of San Francisco. His lawyer, Brandon, with Brandon's nephew, Terry, are sent to the ranch to buy it. Brandon fails to accomplish his task, but Terry talks in law with Dolores. Buckwell is incensed by the failure and plans to void the old Spanish land grant and oust Vasquez.

Terry caught both the leer and the nod, furious at the implication, replied: "That matter was entirely uncalled for." Without an other word to either of them he left the room.

Both men appeared surprised at Terry's sudden outburst, but Buckwell looked thoughtful as he said: "Better watch the boy, Brandon—he's a little too quick on the trigger." Brandon nodded and his grim expression boded no good for his impetuous nephew. As he turned to leave Buckwell continued: "And remember—I want definite results on the Vasquez matter—tomorrow—this time don't fail."

Buckwell followed to the door and locked it behind him. As he returned to the table he saw Dolores' face was gone and in its place appeared a worried and haunted look. His head bowed and he glanced from side to side with a fugitive air. Listening a moment to be sure no one was approaching, he walked to the panel wall and creasing the secret button disappeared down the same dark stairway that only a few minutes before had been used by his fair visitor, San Toy.

CHAPTER V

Buckwell Unmasked
Down the noiseless, carpeted stairway and along a narrow passage for a distance of perhaps fifty feet Buckwell made his way with a speed that indicated he was on familiar ground. He halted abruptly in the darkness, and from a door he heard his progress. Pressing a cunningly concealed button that seemed to be part of the hinge, the door slid away noiselessly as he entered a high ceilinged chamber handsomely furnished. It was lighted by the soft gleam of a single, huge shaded lamp beautifully inlaid. On the floor was a heavy oriental carpet, its golden richness lost in the deep shadows beyond the circle of light. Soft silken cushions were scattered about in inviting places.

Buckwell closed the door and crossed to a heavy silk curtain that covered nearly all of one side of the room. Reaching behind the drapery, he brought out an exquisitely embroidered Chinese coat of elaborate design which he slipped on. He topped it off with a small tight fitting skull cap of black silk.

Again reaching for the curtain he pulled aside with an air of deep reverence and exposed to view a life sized figure of a Buddha resting on a shrine of jade and pearls. The figure shone with a burning and as he turned to it, the silent figure of Chris Buckwell stood revealed, as real a Manchu as any of the long legged he had dismissed from his living room.

Gone were all the characteristics of the political czar and the ruler of the Tenderloin and in their place, now that he was safe from the prying eyes of his henchmen, appeared the immobile slant eyed features of a Chinaman.

Bowing low before the image, he fell on his knees and rocking back and forth as if his very soul was in torment, prayed, "Oh, God of my Fathers, forgive me—forgive me that I have sinned against my people—that I have denied my blood and have persecuted those who are my brothers.

As Buckwell continued praying to the God of his ancestors a seal of wild laughter burst from a half lit corner of the room. It was weird and blood curdling. Buckwell shuddered.

The face of a hideous dwarf, barely discernible, peered through the iron bars of a cage-like affair that was built in one side of the wall. His lips were drawn back in a nasty snarl and as the gleaming eyes again encountered the kneeling figure before the shrine his wild laughter recoiled through the underground room.

Buckwell rose from his knees and shrank back in fear at the half crazed face peering down upon him. The dwarf's gaunt arm, draped in tattered rags, came through the barred cage, came through the bars and his finger pointed at Buckwell accusingly.

"So," he said in a surprisingly well modulated voice, "you are more evil deeds upon your soul. Once more you come to seek forgiveness, not through penitence, but to dispel the black fear from your cowardly heart."

Again the laugh rang out and the finger still pointed in the same way as before. It was done with deliberate intent to infuriate Buckwell, the poor dwarf's will was not to be broken.

It was more than Buckwell could stand. With a glare of fury he seized the extended arm and clung out a cleverly concealed knife from his waist line poised it threateningly.

"The dwarf did not flinch. 'Kill me! Kill me, my brother, I bear!' he said tauntingly, looking Buckwell full in the eyes. To do the arms of his ancestors would be infinitely more sweet than to ensure this prison you have made for me.

They gazed at each other fixedly, byzant in the eyes of one, contempt in those of the other. It was unbelievable that two men so different in appearance could be blood brothers. At some time in the past they had both had exceptional opportunities for study. Buckwell had been carefully trained, but not for the sort of things that drew his brother's arm as suddenly as he had seized it and turned back to the shrine with bowed head.

"So you fear to put an end to the tortures of this decaying body of mine," continued the dwarf in a mocking tone. "You, the dauntless kind of prey, are afraid! Alright! Yet I fear nothing."

Buckwell remained standing with bowed head. He did not speak.

The aggravating voice came again. "You the victor—the victor of worms. But remember the words of Confucius, my brother. 'Falling hurts least those who fly low.'"

For years Buckwell had kept this queer creature a prisoner. It was a necessary precaution to prevent his nationality from being revealed. Although dwarfed in body, the ill-fated brother had a keen mind and had expo-d Buckwell as a betrayer of his race.

The dwarf's laughter of the imprisoned dwarf continued to ring in Buckwell's ears, like the inevitable tolling of death, as he threw himself on his knees before the shrine and resumed his praying.

great importance. This was true with Dolores. She knew why her Grandfather was so perturbed and it upset her considerably because she could think of no way to relieve his mind from worry. She agreed that it would be disastrous and heart-breaking to lose the only solution she could offer. She would think of nothing to do that would change the situation.

Sitting beside the fountain idly picking out a melody on her guitar she forgot about her estate difficulties and began day dreaming of Terry.

Suddenly she recalled the old myth of the wishing well and breaking a blossom from a nearby rose bush tossed it over her shoulder into the fountain, saying, "I wish to wish hard and make the desire come true."

The dull thump of something falling in her lap made Dolores' eyes fly open in surprise. A rose the very rose she had tossed into the wishing well was caught in the strings of her guitar! Before she had time to turn around to see where it had come from another rose fell beside it jumping up quickly as she looked around and found—Terry with a third rose in his upraised hand.

Improved. Some improvement is noted in the truck branch of the industry. The trend of employment in Michigan continues upward and is well above the level of a year ago. Building, public improvements and farm work have taken up the slack which existed in the employment situation last winter. There is a shortage of skilled labor in some sections. Lake shipping held back by unusual ice conditions at the Soo and at Buffalo, is beginning to open up and is providing employment for a large number of workers. Detroit's employment figures are climbing steadily upward. On May 8 the number employed in factories comprising two-thirds of the city's working population totaled 253,833, which was 6,394 greater than a month ago, 248,777 more than a year ago, and several thousands higher than for any week since April 1926.
