Proof needed for U.P. car trip

Several weeks ago I received the following letter from George T. Springer of 3450 Heritage Drive, Minneapolis, Minn. "Gentlemen. "In the late 1890's and the early 1900's the Boston Bloomer Girls' Baseball Team barnstormed the Midwest playing amateur and semi-pro teams. The pitcher, catcher, and third baseman were men. They travelled in a Pullman car from town to town. "I am a native of Gladstone, Mich. and I saw them play in 1899. I do not recall the score of the game and the advance publicity. "It is my desire to obtain a Xerox copy of a picture of the team and a Xerox copy of a narrative thereon. "The issues of the Gladstone Delta for 1899 were destroyed by fire in 1901 eliminating any aid in my quest. I have been a subscriber to the Delta Reporter for many years. "In my file on baseball I found the following notation: "Manistique Pioneer Tribune July 20, 1939, 40 years ago column: Jack Harvey, in advance of the Boston Bloomers, female baseball organization, was in the city Monday making arrangements for the appearance of the club here. "It is possible that there was a picture of the team in the Tribune in the advance publicity and a narrative. If so, kindly advise the cost to me of a xerox. "Your favor will be greatly appreciated. (Signed) George T. Springer." I attempted to locate the article and narrative that Mr. Springer has requested but came empty-handed. Perhaps some of the readers can help him out. Those who remember the team could possibly write him or send their remembrances to me and I will forward them.

Memoirs

By Mark Eisenlohr

Also if anybody can come up with a date that the team visited Manistique it would aid me in finding newspaper articles. The following letter was received from the Upper Peninsula Travel and Recreation Association. It was forwarded to us in hopes that we could help the person seeking the information. "Dear sirs: "Some time ago I clipped from the Munising News an article about your interest in obtaining information pertaining to Michigan's Upper Peninsula. "My husband and father were from the Upper. My husband is George Merwin the son of Lewis James Merwin, former editor of the Munising News and Manistique Pioneer-Tribune. George's grandfather, Fred Merwin resided in Manistique and had a dray business. "In his younger days, Fred, with Ben Lyons, travelled across the Upper in the first auto to have made the trip. An article was written in one of the newspapers about this and Lew had a copy but unfortunately it was burned in a fire. "I have been trying to trace this fact down and have not been successful. I wondered in any of the material you have received if it had come to light? "I have been working on the family genealogy and thought this would add some interest should the fact be proven. I am enclosing a self-addressed envelope. Thank you for any help you can give me. (signed) Mrs. George F. Merwin.

No dates were given in the letter, but I assume the trip was made sometime in the late 1920's. Again, perhaps some of the readers remember this trip and could help Mrs. Merwin record this event. It sounds like there would be quite a story behind this one. The first auto trip across the peninsula! If you remember any of it, give me a call or write a note, I will forward it too Mrs. Merwin. By now, many people will have received their copy of "Lumberjack," William S. Crowe's detailed account of the lumber industry in Manistique. If you don't have one, and are interested in obtaining one, stop by the Tribune office, but it should be done right away. We only have a few hundred copies left and once they're gone it will be a while before more are printed.

Why Fitz didn't show for Ginger Rogers fete

If It Fitz

by Jim Fitzgerald

This will be hard to explain. I know my mother will never understand. I was invited to meet Ginger Rogers, but I declined. It was even suggested I might dance with her, but I said I had a previous commitment. I was lying.

This is nothing personal against Ginger. I am a movie freak and also a leg fan. I saw every movie Ginger Rogers made. I reached puberty two years early because of the way she looked in short shorts. What a doll.

In recent years, I've seen Ginger on the TV talk shows. At first, I didn't want to watch. I was afraid she'd be just one more of those show biz legends who keep reappearing on Johnny Carson's couch, looking like the Ghost of Glamour Past. They make me nervous. I worry that a stitch will pop and Grandma Moses will burst out of Lucille Ball's skin.

But Ginger is a legend who stands up well under close examination. That's what Chuck Thurston, the Free Press critic, wrote after seeing her show at the Music Hall Center this week. At age 65, she looks 45, even in shorts, and certainly a man with several chins will forgive her the inevitable scarf or turtleneck.

No, I didn't avoid meeting Ginger because I feared that her appearance 40 years later would ruin marvelous memories of boyish lechery. If she can't still turn me on today, the fault is in the ignition, not the igniter.

So, what was my reason for sending regrets? My wife wondered if it were politics. Movie stars frequently come to town to entertain but spend more time explaining White House policies than entertaining. Because they play golf with the president, they know how to save the world from communism and vapor lock. This always bugs me.

Bob Hope, for instance. When he was in Detroit recently he pronounced Spiro Agnew and Richard Nixon innocent. Hope said they never did anything wrong. Those were not the jokes. I didn't meet Hope, either.

Ginger Rogers recently sold her plush home in Palm Springs to Gerald Ford, who will use it to house his golf cart. There was the danger that the amenities of this transaction made Ginger privy to the solution to the energy problem. And she might relay this solution from the Music Hall stage, between songs. If you don't believe it could happen, you didn't see Marlon Brando's stand-in save the American Indian by waving an Oscar on TV.

But Ginger proved as politically innocent as she is remarkable preserved. Twice on TV I heard her admit doing business with Gerald Ford. And that's all she said. No claims to special knowledge because of her proximity to Ford's backswing. Another point for Ginger.

And another excuse lost for me. It wasn't that I feared being bored by a phony pundit. And it wasn't that I prefer to remember Ginger the way she was. So why did I snub the invitation to meet her? It's confession time.

The invitation to meet Ginger was hand-delivered by two nice women from the Music Hall. It was in a bag along with a bottle of champagne, dainty crackers and fancy cheese.

That's class. It is also intimidating to a guy who always used to get his party invitations via the office bulletin board, with an RSVP but always a BYOB.

That was before I became a big-city columnist. Now I receive all sort of engraved requests for the honor of my presence at everything from the introduction of a new car in California to the opening of a new seine in a sewage plant.

It is a remarkable coincidence that my overwhelming desirability as a guest was discovered at the same time I started writing a column. I once told my wife.

"She explained my charm succinctly. 'Show up without your typewriter and they will throw you out,'" she said.

Whatever. The Ginger Rogers's invitation said "Black Tie Optional."

"There's no option," I explained to my wife. "Every guy there will be dressed like Fred Astaire. The ushers are going to wear white satin tails. I wouldn't be comfortable in an unstuffed shirt. We aren't going."

Instead, we went to the Woodbridge Tavern, one of Detroit's oldest saloons, and listened to Gerry O. Connor sing, and Yolanda Jones on the piano. A sozzled fellow at the bar danced solo every number.

"They are not having this much fun at Ginger Rogers's party," I said, flicking the beer suds off my nose.

"You are a natural born slob," my wife said.

Now you know the reason I didn't meet Ginger Rogers.

Focus on lobbying

What seems to be an annual phenomenon, Michigan's effort to pass an effective regulatory lobbying is occurring again in Lansing.

The State Senate Committee on Municipalities and Election is holding hearings around the state and in the State Capitol on a bill offered by Sen. Gary Corbin, D-Clio, which would require lobbyists to file meaningful reports on their financial operations.

Frankly, we have mixed emotions about the proposal. There is no question that Michigan needs a stronger law than it now has on lobbying regulation.

And, the Corbin bill has some features we believe to be desirable. But, the requirement that lobbyists report how much they spend on food and drink and for individual legislators is not realistic. As it now stands, the lobbyists must report any amount over $1.

Presumably, some reporting of such spending is desirable. But, we don't think our legislators can be bought for the price of lunch and we are uncomfortable with the labeling process that might attach to them with publication of such information.

Getting together with lawmakers to present their clients' case over lunch or breakfast is a common lobbying practice. It is for many, the best opportunity they have to talk to busy lawmakers.

Obviously, this practice is capable of abuse. When significant amounts of money are spent to wine and dine lawmakers the reporting requirement is needed and making such information public would have a real deterrent value, on both lobbyists and lawmakers.

Some sensible compromise is needed on what expenditures for food and drink must be reported. $1 is not practical -- but it is a useful point at which to begin the negotiations.

Features of the bill that we like include requirements that lobbyists be required to identify their employers, keep records and file public reports every three months on the money spent on food and beverages for public officials.

There also should be reports on other lobbying costs, such as those for advertising and mass mailings.

The bill would require reports on financial transactions with public officials of more than $500 and on lobbying activities for each reporting period, listing, for example, the bills they worked for or opposed.

Lobbyists would not be allowed to give gifts worth more than $10 in any one month to a public official.

Another significant provision, and one we believe desirable, would prohibit public officials from becoming lobbyists in their own governmental units within two years of leaving their public posts.

The secretary of state and attorney general would be responsible for enforcing the law. Penalties for violation would range from a $10-a-day fine for failure to register as a lobbyist to $10,000 and a maximum three-year jail sentence for lobbyists who give a public official a gift worth more than $3,000.

Some 493 businesses and organizations are represented in Lansing by lobbyists. The present law requires them to register but has few enforcement provisions and no penalties for violations.

Lobbying is not the sinister activity it is often portrayed to be. Lobbyists perform a useful function and most legislators make good and sophisticated use of their contacts with them.

The stories of abuses in Washington by lobbyists must be weighed against this record of legitimate service to clients and the public.

We are for reasonable regulations of lobbyists. We hope the Legislature does more than talk about it this time.

Don't argue with skunks, real or not

A few years ago there was a popular record that made its way up the charts with the title, "Dead Skunk In The Middle of the Road." It was one of those novelty tunes that caught on, made someone some quick money and then faded into oblivion.

During the past month or so, I've got to thinking that it's a song that should be resurrected and given some playing time on radio stations here in the U.P.

If you've driven the highways and byways of the U.P. with any regularity during the summer you should have noticed the high number of fatalities in the skunk population. Dead skunks are littering the highways and their fragrance stretches from one end of the Peninsula to the other.

I haven't taken the time to check with the DNR, but it would be my guess that the skunk population must be on the increase. Someone in the DNR must be doing a "body count" and can relate those figures to the growth in the skunk population.

Driving thousands of miles each year as I do, it was something I couldn't help but notice during the summer months. It seemed that every time I made a trip between Manistique and Escanaba or Gladstone and Marquette, there were more and more dead skunks.

Just driving around town you notice quite a few of the little black and white "kittens" that haven't made it crossing a busy street. Maybe I have something of a strange mind, but all of the skunks fascinated me and made me more and more curious.

For several weeks, I had been tempted to write a column on the subject of skunks, but had discarded it as a "stinking" idea. Then last night, I drove into the yard after a late night at work and there was an animal on my backporch. When I flashed the headlights back on there was no mistaking the tell tale markings. A friendly skunk was perched on my porch.

After some horn tooting and shouting from a distance, he made his way slowly off into the woods.

This was the second time this summer I've narrowly avoided getting sprayed by a skunk. The first time occurred late one night when I almost mistook a skunk for one of the rabbits that was making his home in my garden. Fortunately, I caught the scent before he caught mine.

Maybe you've heard the stories about people who have skunks as pets. That maybe would work in an isolated instance, but I'm not ready to make the first move to befriend my neighborhood skunk.

Men, machines and dedication

Side Tracks

by Arnold Mackowski

It is a popular thought that people in the old days had it a lot rougher than we do today.

Laborers had to work harder to earn their family's bread. Staying on a job required great stamina, especially in the era of the 50 and 60-hour work week.

Today, it is assumed, workers and professional people have it much easier. There is a shorter work week for most employees, more time-saving machines and conveniences to handle many formerly back-breaking chores.

The machine age has also made it easier to maintain a home. With modern appliances and processed foods, you don't even need much ingenuity to become an average cook.

All of this provides a labor-free environment that contrasts sharply with the drudgery of daily life 150 or 200 years ago.

Or so we may think. It appears we may be exchanging the physical stress of the old times for a mental stress that researchers are continually discovering is a widespread phenomenon.

According to the National Mental Health Association, the incidence of mental depression has been increasing in recent years. About 1.5 million Americans are now being treated for depression. As many as 8 to 15 million more are believed to remain untreated.

And the worst trend is that depression is being found more prevalent among those in their teens and twenties, second only to the elderly as a group.

It may not be enough to blame television, whose impact is only part of the technological overkill that most families contend with.

There are greater social expectations placed upon young men and women to succeed in a country largely free of grueling work. And with less of that kind of labor to go around, more are competing for jobs that the computer age is gradually eliminating.

Sounds frustrating. And so it must be for teachers to try and prepare children with a modernizing educational system.

And so it must be for workers who have found that as more gadgetry and machines enter their environment, the more hectic, and not less convenient, their jobs become.

Machines, telephones, and calculators speed the work load, but more work is therefore expected from everybody.

It may be a credit to the dedication of the American worker that a mechanical breakdown is a sorrowful event rather than a satisfying relief.

However, emotional concern over steel cold objects only heightens our susceptibility to mental problems.

And it brings little comfort to hear that there are a lot of people who are able to function in society but have subtle mental and emotional disorders.

Maybe we should expect more out of machines than we do out of ourselves.

Street work at 11 p.m.

To the Editor:
Sept. 12, 1977 10:40 p.m.:
Having been awakened from a sound sleep by an engine snoring, bell dinging, pavement scaping whatchamacallit, I feel compelled to write this letter to the city manager.
I compliment you, sir for finally filling the large hole on Oak Street but at this hour of the night?
A suspicious person might ask who or what was in that hole? What made it necessary to use the cover of darkness to fill the cavity?
I certainly hope that this "overtime" work situation will continue this winter when we have snow up to our buttses.

I for one will expect to hear the roar of city plows at this hour and even later in the night, so that by morning since sidewalk plowing is a thing of the past, my daughter and other children can walk to school or be driven on safe, plowed and sanded streets.
Glad you're on the ball on this Monday Sept. 12, 11:05 p.m.
Hope you don't wind up behind the eight-ball this winter when the snow flies.
Lynn M. Wehner
(A taxpayer two houses away from all the racket.)
Good Night!

Thanks to Uerling

To the Editor:
This is a copy of a letter addressed to Lt. Uerling:
This letter is written by way of thanking you and the Michigan Department of State Police for their ready, willingness to assist in times of medical emergencies and urgencies.
Twice this summer we have had occasion to call on your department for help with urgent problems involving patient care and you responded immediately and expeditiously.
I wish to take this means of thanking you and the Department of State Police for this splendid attitude and concern for the welfare of our people.

ALTHOUGH THERE is an official explanation for this natural cross found in rock at the John Zellar, Jr. Farm in Germfask, it's a little too complicated for the layman. Most just gaze in wonderment. According to Zellar, no carving is evident on the stone, which is in the foundation of his barn. Geologists have examined the stone and said that it was formed during the ice age, probably when two rocks were compressed together. Zellar is contemplating selling the stone to a religious group although he's not sure just what it would be worth.

Rafting down the Manistique to recon

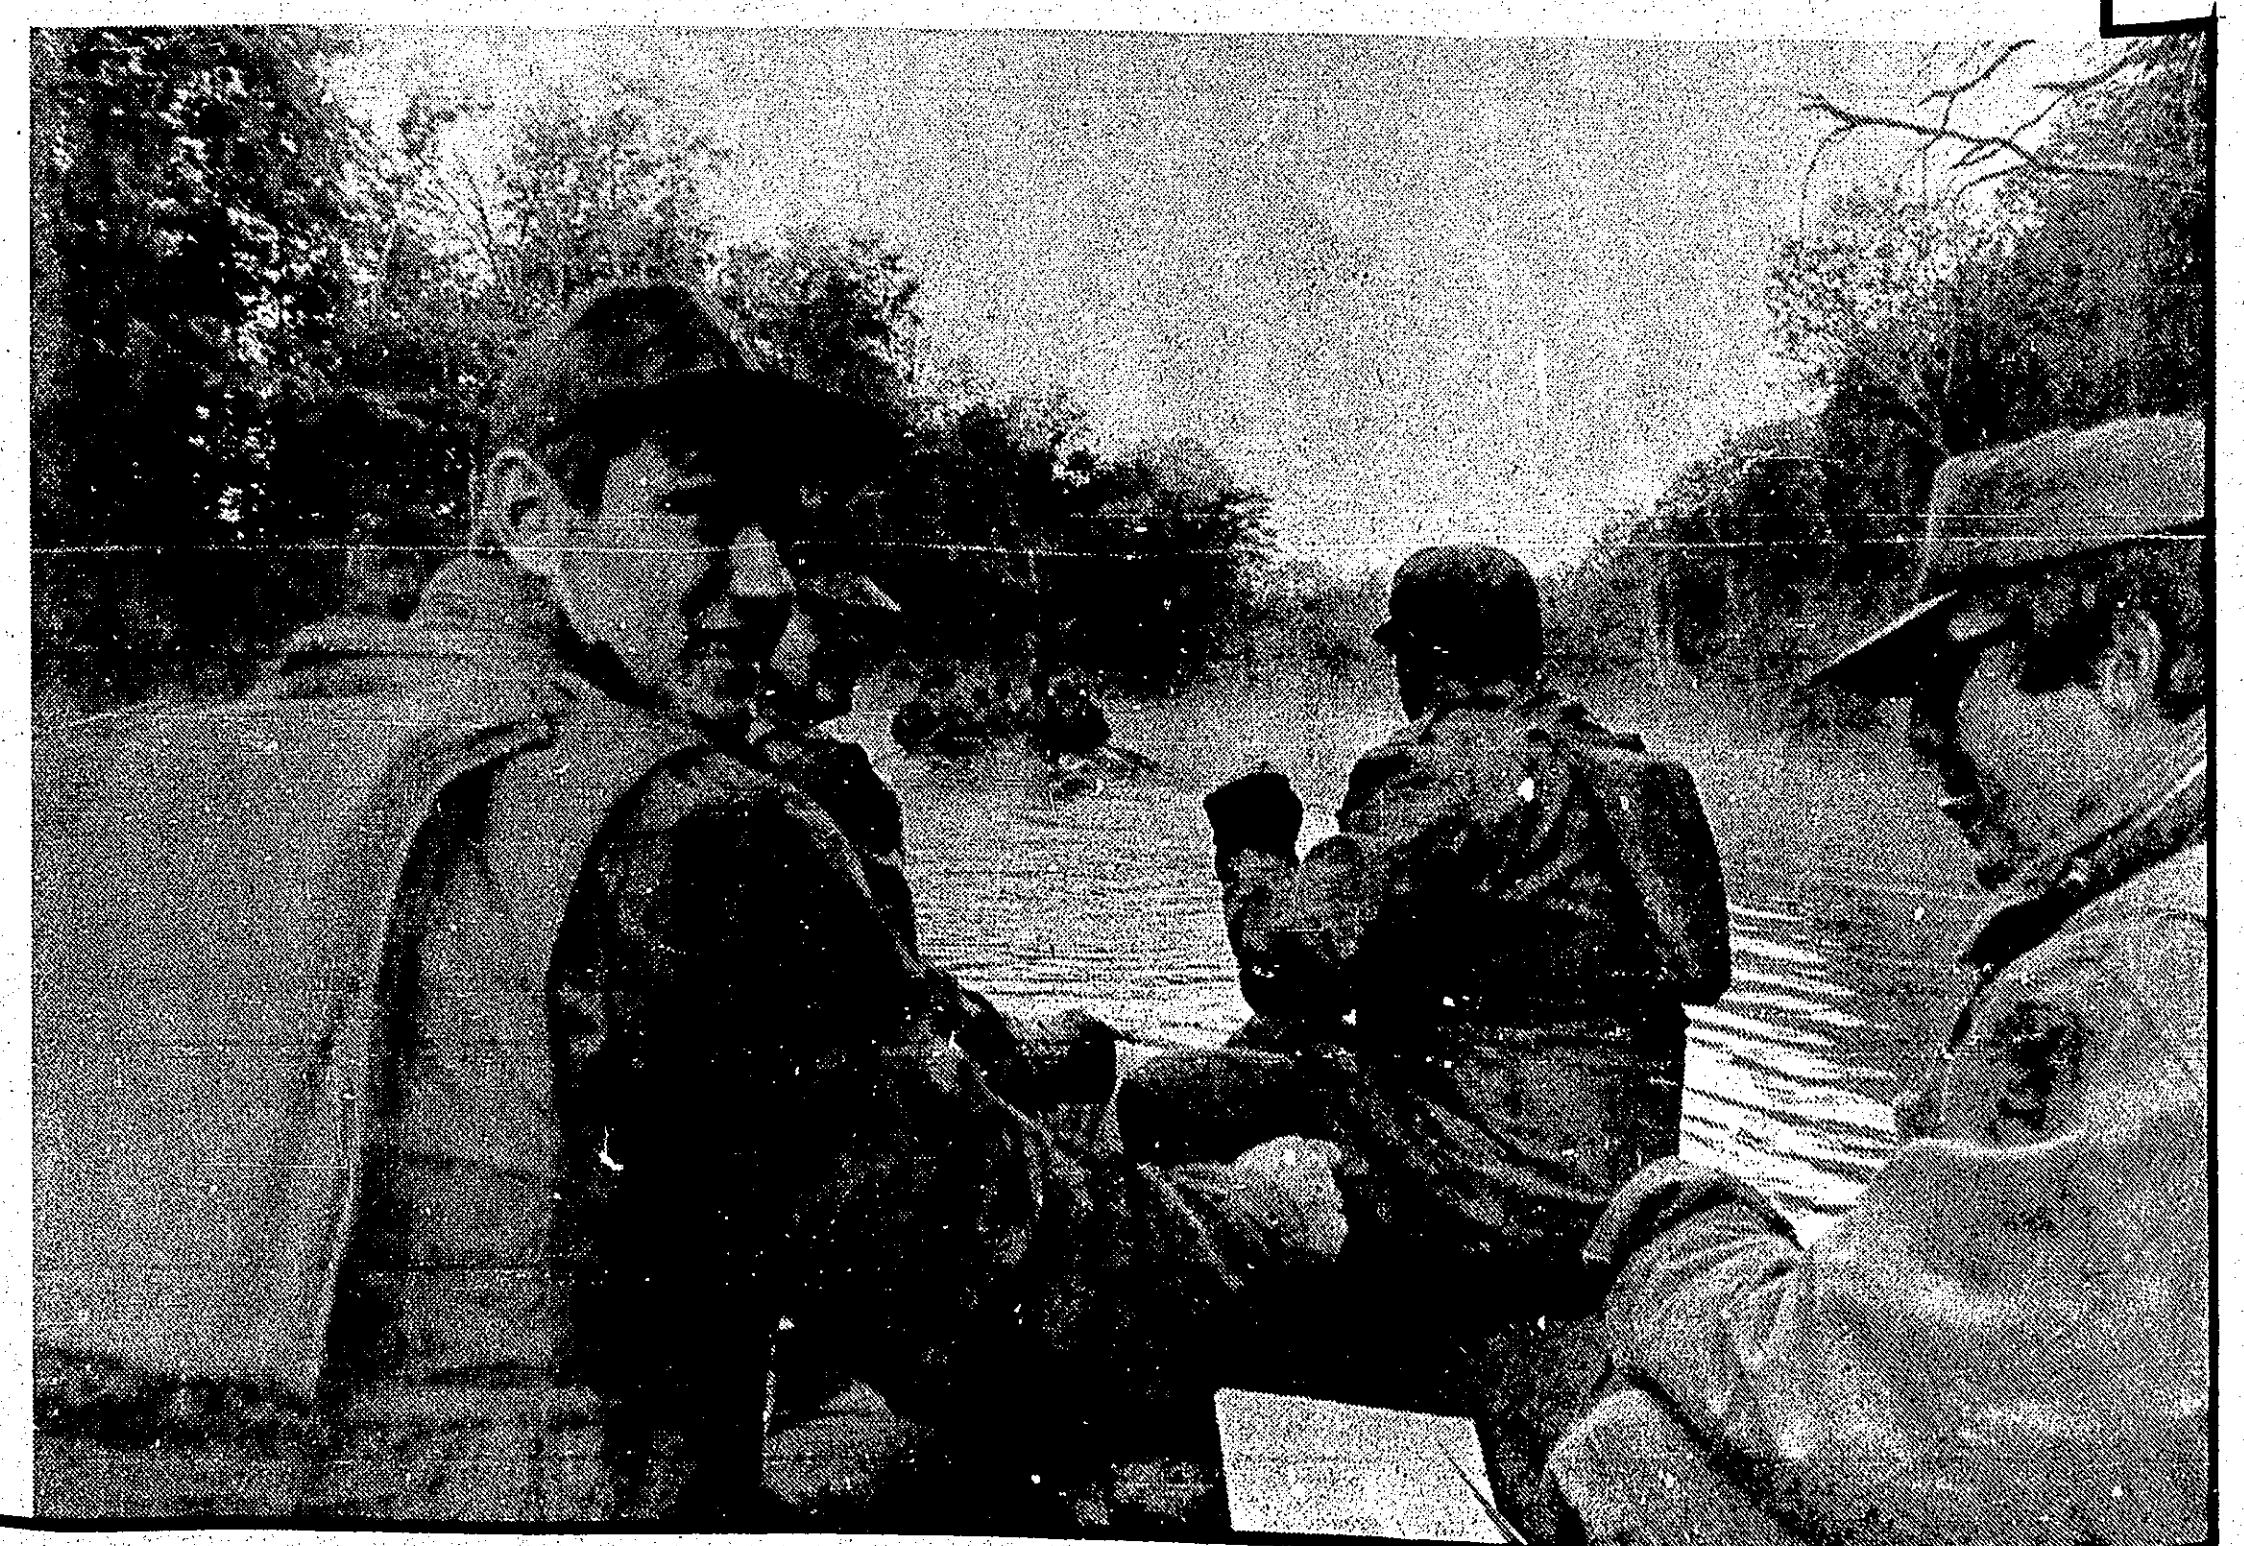

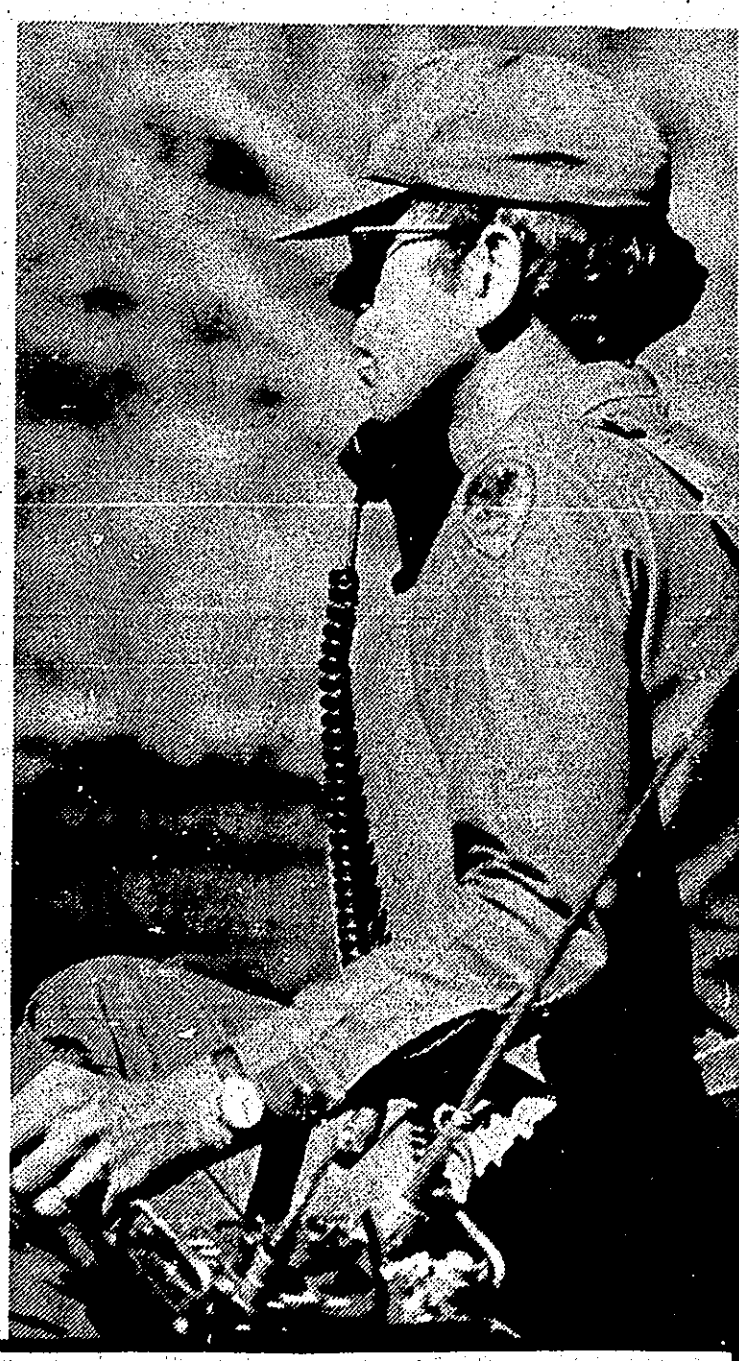

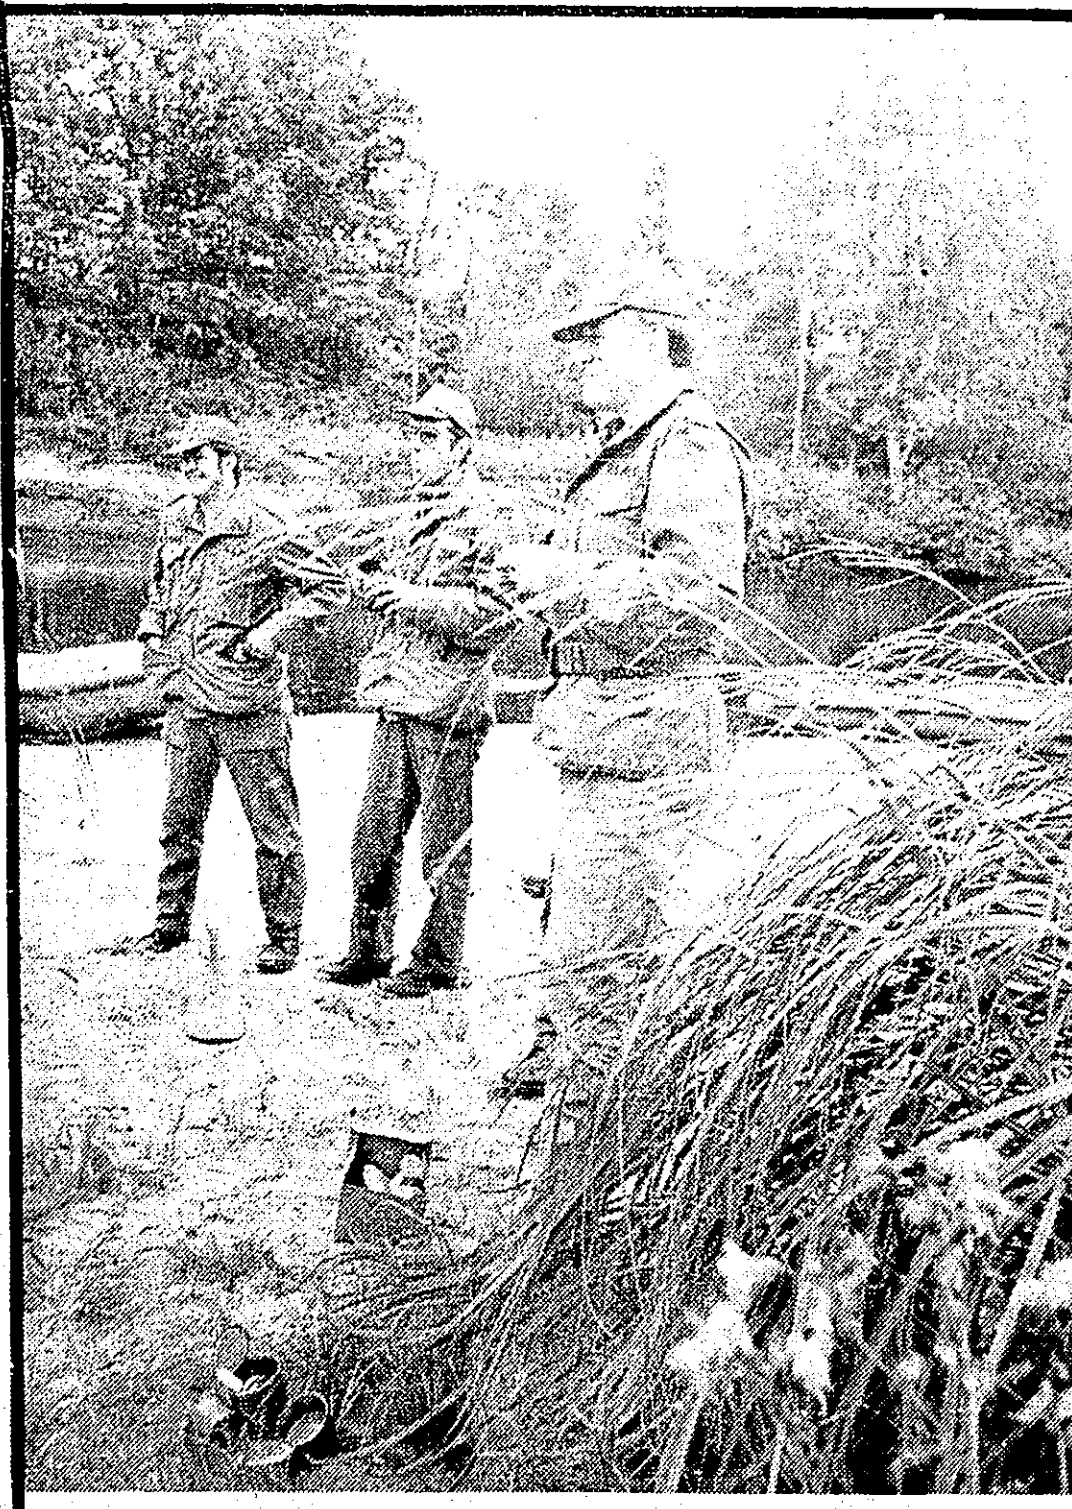

ABOVE: Don Rochefort and Schley Livermore, both of Manistique, dig their paddles in during the 1437th's recent training exercise down the Manistique River. RIGHT: One of four rafts which made the trip break early Sunday morning as steam rises from the river. BELOW: Don Rochefort, Roger Hubell of Manistique, and Bob Leny, PSG, (Platoon Sergeant) take time for lunch: regulation army "C" rations. MIDDLE: Dick Stout, of Manistique, pauses from opening his lunch to look at the photographer while Jim Wayne of Manistique, MIDDLE RIGHT, checks out the river ahead. Wayne acted as safety boat operator for the trip. BOTTOM LEFT: A Guardsmen raft prepares to beach after the first day of reconnaissance. A total of 40 miles was travelled over the two-day overnight training exercise. BOTTOM MIDDLE: Roger Huddleston of Manistique calls in to radio coordinators on land to report their position and relay recon information. BOTTOM RIGHT: Darryl Metcalf, Germfask, Rochefort, Livermore, and Dave Huddleston, PSG, takes a break early Sunday morning from the paddling. A unit raft can be seen just ahead disappearing in the early morning fog.

Story and photos by Mark Eisenlohr
Situation: The 3rd Armored Fusiliers have established a beach head at Grand Marais and are pushing south along a front between M-17 and M-94.
 They are a tank heavy division and are advancing south to enclose the 2nd Infantry Battalion before they can withdraw by ship from Port Inland to the Lower Peninsula.
Mission: Recon the Manistique River starting at the Mead Creek site south to Mervin Creek site for possible bridge sites for the 3rd Infantry Battalion to withdraw as they retreat.
 An invasion of Fusiliers (flintlock rifle-carry soldiers) in the Upper Peninsula? sula?
 According to a war-like situation drawn up by officers of the 1437th Company of the National Guard, that's exactly what happened.
 The "invasion" was all part of a training exercise scheduled over last weekend to familiarize Guardsmen with actual river reconnaissance work should such a situation actually come about.
 The Manistique National Guard Company is a Manistique brigade, in charge of scouting possible areas for bridge construction on a given river and supervising the construction of a bridge.
 Sectional, flotation type bridges would be utilized. The bridges are capable of being assembled in a few short hours and can withstand great amounts of weight.
 As part of their weekend training duty, members of the 1437th rafted some 40 miles of the Manistique River, scouting for possible bridge construction sites.
 During the two-day excursion, section leaders on each raft recorded information pertaining to the river.
 Information like river depth, width, type of banks, and approach landings on both sides of the river as well as current speed and rafting speed.

 "In actual combat situations this information would be relayed by radio headquarters where it would be placed over a map and plotted to exact locations," explained Section Leader Sgt. Dave Huddleston.
 "And the whole thing would have only taken a few short hours rather than two days," he added.
 Were it the real thing, several units would have been dispatched from various points on the river with each unit recording a few miles of the river and then reporting its findings.
 Officers at headquarters would then plot the information and make a decision as to the bridge location.
 "Once the site is chosen, the bridge company is responsible only for transporting the bridge sections to the site," according to Sgt. Richard Ketcik of Manistique.
 He added that the men must be trained in all phases, including bridge construction and demolition, should a situation occur where the company has the only available manpower around.
 It was a little different over the weekend, however, with only a hypothetical situation existing.
 Joking, splashing water, paddling, and a few races between the barge-like rafts were mixed with the more serious duties of training.
 "This is actually the first training type weekend of this sort for most of these men," said Ketcik. "We're hoping that more can be planned in the future. The men really seem to enjoy it."
 Various exercises sprinkled in the weekend training included the plotting and diagramming of the CC bridge northeast of Manistique for demolition.
 We sketched a plan for charges to get the most efficient and quickest blow up we can," says Huddleston.
 The whole bridge wouldn't necessarily be blown up either, according to the sergeant. He said the only 60 feet may be blown out on the "friendly" side so that it could be reconstructed to allow recrossing by allied forces.
 According to Huddleston, only the correct amount of explosive would need to be used to create the most efficient demolition. Accordingly, information such as river current would have to be recorded.
 "If it is a swift flowing river, just knocking a few key posts out could bring the rest of the bridge down. A slower river might require more explosives to damage it sufficiently where it could not be used," explained Huddleston.
 "It wasn't all work for the men, however, since it was a training practice."
 Saturday, after a 10 hour stint at the paddles, where the men affectionately named their rafts "Madelyn", a steak dinner was waiting for them at the night's campsite.
 After a quick breakfast Sunday morning, it was back to the river at 7:30 a.m. to finish their recon work for the day.
 A few complaints could be heard from the men while forcing the rafts down the strea. "Quite a chore considering their barge-like shape," said one Guardsman, as he caught his breath.
 Occasional strains of "Row, row, row your boat" could also be heard drifting across the water as some one farther down river sang, "Paddlin' Madelyn home."

good job of advertising. Get the Consignment Blank in by Sept. 15.

Keep in mind that our organization wants to improve. Do not bring poor cattle to this sale. Keep anything that will grade standard at home and sell at some other time. Good quality cattle should be the goal of every farmer consigning at this sale. Let's have only the prime, choice, and good grades at this sale.

If you have any animals that are questionable after reading over the rules, do not bring them. Sell them in a private sale and everyone will be happier. Our sale should develop into a quality sale and this should be maintained. You can help make it that way. Don't try to push something through that others leave at home.

Dairy steers will be accepted again this year.

If you have any questions, ask your County Agent or a Director of the Association.

Mail your Consignment Blank to Roy Dalgard, Fayette, Mich. 49830. Do it now!

FAMILIES: CAN WE HELP YOUR RENT?

The Michigan State Housing Development Authority is operating a new Rent Allowance Program designed to aid people who need help to pay their rent.

Families, and elderly, handicapped or disabled individuals are eligible for consideration in the program if their adjusted incomes do not exceed federally established income limits for this area.

Families or eligible individuals who already live in assisted housing, or are on a waiting list for such housing, must specifically apply to be considered for this program. If such families or individuals apply, their places on public housing waiting lists will not be jeopardized.

If you qualify and are accepted as a participant in the Rent Allowance Program:

- The amount you pay for rent and utilities will not exceed 25 percent of your income.
- MSHDA will pay your landlord the difference between the amount you are required to pay and the actual cost of your rent and utilities.
- You may stay in your present home or choose a new place to live, but the housing you choose must be safe, decent and sanitary, and the rent must be within federally prescribed limits.
- Applications will be accepted starting September 26, 1977.

Have you noticed all the beautiful flower gardens around Germfask and Manistique lately? Everything seems to be in full bloom and they are something to see. Hats off to the talented gardeners.

We raffled off a radio-record player combination last week and the lucky winner was a lady from Wells, Mich. Congratulations go out to her.

We are taking orders for anyone from Germfask who are senior citizens, that wishes to have a name badge made for them. They are made of hard plastic with your name, Germfask Senior Citizen and Schoolcraft County engraved on it. The cost is $1.25 each and they are nice to have especially when we go on trips, conventions or any group gathering. If you would like us to order one for you, please let us know soon as possible.

There has been an extension made on the (Special Energy Crisis Intervention Program) fuel oil used for heating last winter. It has been extended until September, so if you missed out on it before, you still have time to send in your application form. We have forms available here at the center if you need one or help in filling it out.

Birthday greetings go out to the following: Thurman Skarritt, Sept. 4th; Tyne Lawrence, Sept. 8th; and Emmett Crawn Sept. 9.

Get the Faults out of "No Fault"

Michigan's "No Fault" Automobile insurance law had already proved the "No Fault" idea can work, and work well. But the law itself has some faults. And it's those faults that will drive insurance costs up and up, while at the same time, possibly causing some insurance companies to cease accepting auto insurance business in our state. It's time we all spoke up and show our legislature our displeasure of the present "No Fault" law. This matter is going to come up before our Legislature in October of this year. We are asking our clients and non-clients to come into our agency and sign a protest card which we will mail to our independent insurance agents associations of the State of Michigan, which in turn will be sent to our Legislators in Lansing.

Senior Citizens

by Eileen Males

One of the nicest things that is happening in our money-raising campaign for our building fund is the cooperation of so many concerned persons and clubs.

Well, something special happened last week. Commander Hans Lund of the World War I Veterans, Barracks 2759, came in with a $50 check for our center. The check was co-signed by Ray M. Carney.

Now these "old-timers" really put a spark in our day, believe me and we thank you!!! That was super special.

We had our monthly pot-luck party at the Arrowhead Inn with a fine attendance, loads of laughs and lots of good food. We want to thank Maggie and Howard Benson for their hospitality.

We are planning a Friday evening Halloween party on Oct. 28. We thought we would line up a Township hall, decorate it, have a nice old fashioned potluck, a small band for evening dancing, some booths for games and have a super time. We'll have prizes for costumes and you can have your choice—you can dress up in a costume or wear whatever you'd like. So start making plans now. We'll need some volunteers and planners.

Some changes have been and are being made in our activities and thrift store location. There will be no blood pressure clinics at the Harbor Towers on Friday morning. It will be held at the Senior Citizens Center. Bertha Davis will make personal home calls to the residents of the towers during the week so they'll not be forgotten.

Our thrift store will be moved to our center's basement Sept. 15 due to no heating facilities at our present location. We will re-open there in June and when we have our new center we will have our store right in our building. We are so grateful to Bryce Barnes of Eastport, Mich., for letting us use this building free of charge.

Seney wildlife refuge open house Sept. 24

SENEY—The Seney National Wildlife Refuge will host an open house on Sept. 24 in recognition of National Hunting and Fishing Day, honoring America's sportsmen who have contributed to conservation programs over the years.

Hunters and non-hunters alike are invited to attend the day's events beginning at 9 a.m. at the refuge visitor center. The films: "A Question of Hunting," "Fisherman's Notebook," "Honkers Prepaid," "Know Your Ducks" and "The Age of Alaska" will be shown along with an 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. firing of the cannon net used for capturing and banding of waterfowl.

A slide series on the steel shot decision and what it means to birds and hunters is also a part of this year's program.

In addition, personnel from the Sea Lamprey Control Center at Marquette and the Pendills Creek National Fish Hatchery will be on hand with colored slides and displays highlighting lake-trout fishery management programs in the Great Lakes.

Guy Block of Grand Marais will display his duck decoy and firearm collection in the visitor center. Block will also demonstrate the fine art of waterfowl retrieving with the assistance of his black lab.

Other attractions will include a 100-foot observation tower, 1.4-mile nature trail and the 7-mile long self-guided auto tour.

Artist raffle winners

A Newberry couple are the recipients of the Schoolcraft County Starving Artist raffle last Thursday, Aug. 25, in Gulliver.

The couple, Fred and Gaydona Dandona, are their own Arts guild in Newberry in the spring of 1978. Called the Sweet Art Shop, they plan on specializing in candies, upper peninsula art and original gifts.

Their prize for winning the raffle was a print of the "Sandpipers" designed by Melissa Carr of Rapid River.

OWNERS AND MANAGERS CAN WE HELP YOU FILL VACANT UNITS?

The Michigan State Housing Development Authority is seeking the participation of owners of quality rental housing units for a new Rent Allowance Program.

Under the program, qualified tenants will live in housing units owned by participating landlords, and will pay a predetermined percentage of their monthly income to the landlords for rent. The difference between the amount paid by the tenant and the actual cost of rent and utilities for units will be paid directly to the landlord by MSHDA.

To participate, a landlord must execute a MSHDA-approved lease with a participating tenant, and enter into a one year contract with MSHDA. Under the contract:

MSHDA automatically pays a substantial portion of the rent and utility cost of the unit directly to the landlord.

MSHDA guarantees 80 percent of the rent for up to 60 days to cover vacancy loss resulting from violation of the lease.

MSHDA guarantees a security loss of up to one month's rent.

MSHDA refers qualified applicants in the event of vacancy.

MSHDA provides for rent increases made necessary by legitimate cost increases.
